“The way in which the Confederation operates is unique – even when compared with other countries.”

Dear Reader

There are three characteristics of a good administration: firstly, good politicians, who lead the administration, who take decisions and who defend those decisions with conviction, both internally and externally. Secondly, clearly defined areas of responsibility; within the administration, but also between the government and Parliament, and between the administration and those who oversee the administration. Thirdly, efficient and conscientious employees, who know who to turn to if there are disagreements to resolve. None of these three characteristics is self-evident or simple to achieve; but when problems arise in the administration, the causes often lie in one or more of these areas. It is therefore all the more important to ensure that we safeguard our strengths: carefully selecting decision-makers, making sure to uphold the separation of powers, and taking care when hiring new employees.

The way in which the Confederation ‘operates’, in other words the way in which proposals are prepared by the Federal Council, debated, adopted in the chambers of Parliament and put before voters, and if necessary revised, is unique – even when compared with other countries. The following pages provide a good overview of these processes. If, after reading this, you know what an optional referendum is and how many have been held since their introduction in 1874; and if you can also say which federal office the abbreviation FSVO stands for and where the Federal Patent Court is based, then you have studied this brochure carefully!

I hope you enjoy reading this informative publication.

An interview with President Doris Leuthard

ONE PRESIDENT – THREE APPRENTICES – MANY QUESTIONS

The three young interviewers are on apprenticeships at SBB, SwissPost and Swisscom – enterprises owned by the Confederation. But the Federal Palace is unknown territory, and they have never met a member of the Federal Council before. Michelle Wiedmer, Cindy Kern and Hevzi Gasi were curious to meet President

Doris Leuthard, even if they weren't entirely at ease at first. However, the President gave them a warm welcome and asked them about their jobs and life at school. With that the ice was broken, and the interview, which covered a range of pressing topics, could begin.

What do you think about global warming – and what are you doing about it?

The climate is gradually changing. And gradual changes can often go unnoticed at first. But by observing nature over a longer period of time, we can see that temperatures are rising, our glaciers are melting and the ground is drying out. Switzerland wants to tackle the causes and is therefore doing all it can to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. That's why we will continue to tighten our laws and regulations – take vehicle fuel consumption for example. And let's not forget that each and every one of us can play a part in protecting the environment.

Are some changes now irreversible or impossible to stop?

One of the consequences of climate change is that it can lead to the extinction of animal and plant species. The federal government and the cantons are committed to maintaining biodiversity. Unfortunately we don't always succeed. The clearing of the rainforests, which store CO₂, is often irreversible. Switzerland tries to encourage the responsible use of forests according to international rules. The use of labels allows consumers to see whether or not wood has been produced sustainably.

The questions turn to digitalisation and its impact on transport infrastructure and public services.

What do you think about self-driving, computer-controlled vehicles?

I'm a supporter of new technologies. They will help us to better manage the ever increasing levels of mobility in our small country. That goes for both rail and road. As far as road traffic is concerned, we are still in the test phase, which we are using to clarify safety and liability issues. That's why I'm glad that SwissPost is gaining experience of these technologies by running trials with self-driving buses.

Will Switzerland continue to expand its infrastructure despite digitalisation?

More brains and bytes are great, but we still need concrete. The population is growing – and is becoming increasingly mobile, which is why we will be investing heavily in the coming years to increase capacity on our roads and railways. At the same time we also have to make better use of the infrastructure we already have by spreading traffic more evenly throughout the day, for example.

“If we don’t make reforms now, then future generations will pay the price. That would be unfair.”

Do you think it makes sense for someone to have to take the train from Mürren to Lauterbrunnen to collect a parcel from the post office?

While the Federal Council and Parliament determine what public services should be provided, SwissPost itself is free to decide how those services are provided. What is important is that it finds a balance between meeting the needs of the public on the one hand and economic considerations on the other. Naturally SwissPost is under pressure because many people now send emails, not letters – and they use e-banking to pay their bills instead of heading to the counter at the post office. These customers no longer use public services in the traditional sense – in contrast to others who are less familiar with the new digital world. But they too are entitled to a good level of basic service. SwissPost, and indeed Swisscom and SBB, need to look after them too. Changes have to be introduced with sensitivity. This is where there should be a difference between government-owned businesses and their private competitors.

Job security and pensions: the apprentices are concerned about what the future holds for them.

What is the Federal Council doing to ensure that we young people are well provided for when we reach old age?

More and more people are retiring, but the number of people working is falling. That presents a great challenge for the pension system. The Federal Council has adopted a reform of old-age pension provision which retains the present level of pensions and safeguards the financing of the old-age and survivors’ insurance fund for future generations. We want to raise the retirement age for women to 65 and introduce a greater degree of flexibility. In addition, we want to lower the conversion rate for occupational pensions. If we don’t make the necessary reforms now, then future generations will pay the price. That would be unfair.

What is the Federal Council doing to tackle unemployment?

Fortunately unemployment figures in Switzerland are pretty low when compared internationally. But the situation can be difficult for people who find themselves out of work when they are over the age of 50. They can struggle to find a job even though they have far more experience to offer than young people. That’s why I encourage mixed teams. Results are often better when younger and older employees, men and women work together. But the best way of keeping unemployment at bay is through lifelong learning. If you continually keep your skills up to date, you are likely to remain attractive to employers. The federal government and the cantons invest heavily in good training programmes.

We also support structures that allow young mothers and fathers to carry on working. If you keep one foot in the labour market, you are able to keep pace with technological change. At the same time, the federal government’s skilled workers initiative aims to boost the appeal of occupations where there is a shortage of new recruitment; like in construction and healthcare.

SwissPost, Swisscom and SBB together train around 4,500 apprentices. Three of those apprentices had the opportunity to interview President Doris Leuthard:

Michelle Wiedmer (18, left) from Oberwangen (BE) is an IT apprentice at Swisscom in her third year of training (towards a vocational baccalaureate). Cindy Kern (17) from Matten (BE) is training to be a logistics specialist at SwissPost. She is in her second year of training. Hevzi Gasi (23) from Geneva is a third year apprentice building cleaner at SBB.

Switzerland in figures

POPULATION

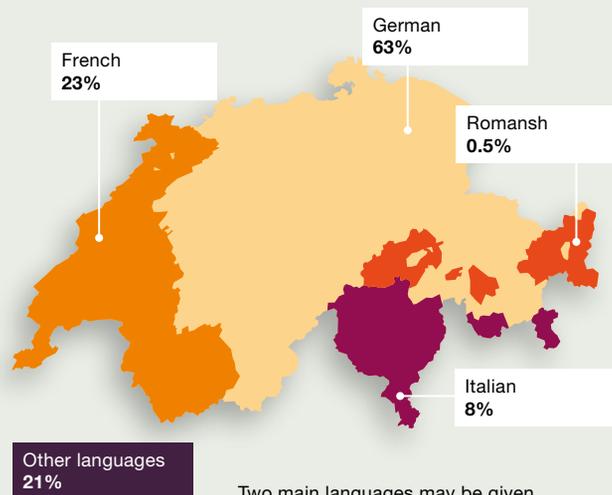

8.3 million people

- 8 327 100 inhabitants
- of whom 2 048 700 are foreign nationals

There are approximately 8.3 million people living in Switzerland, 25 per cent of whom are foreign nationals. More than half of the inhabitants who do not have a Swiss passport were either born in Switzerland or have been living here for at least ten years. The majority of foreign nationals come from an EU or EFTA country, predominantly from Italy (15%), Germany (15%) and Portugal (13%). 15 per cent come from non-European states.

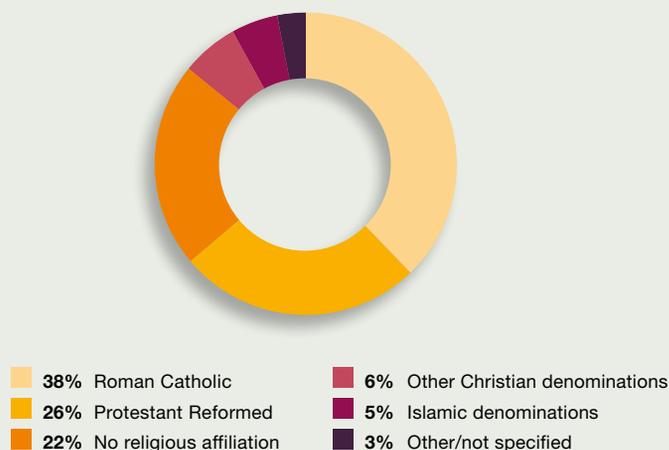

4 national languages

Switzerland is a multilingual country. There are four national languages: German, French, Italian and Romansh. 63 per cent of the population primarily speak (Swiss-)German, 23 per cent French, 8 per cent Italian and 0.5 per cent Romansh. English, Portuguese, Albanian (approximately 3 to 5 per cent of the population) and various other languages are also spoken in Switzerland. Many people state that they have two main languages.

Christian majority

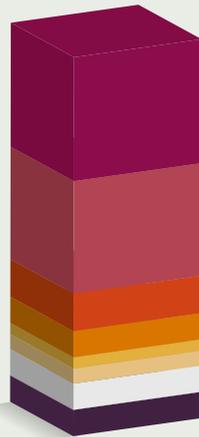

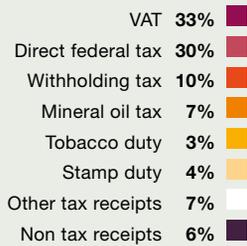

Christians make up 70 per cent of people living in Switzerland. Catholics are the majority in 14 cantons; Protestants are the majority in 3. In the remaining cantons, there is no clear majority. Regardless of whether they are Christian, Muslim or Jewish, religion does not play a central role in the everyday lives of most people. 22 per cent of people are not members of any religion – this number has been on the rise for several years.

FEDERAL FINANCES

Receipts of CHF 67.58 billion (2015)

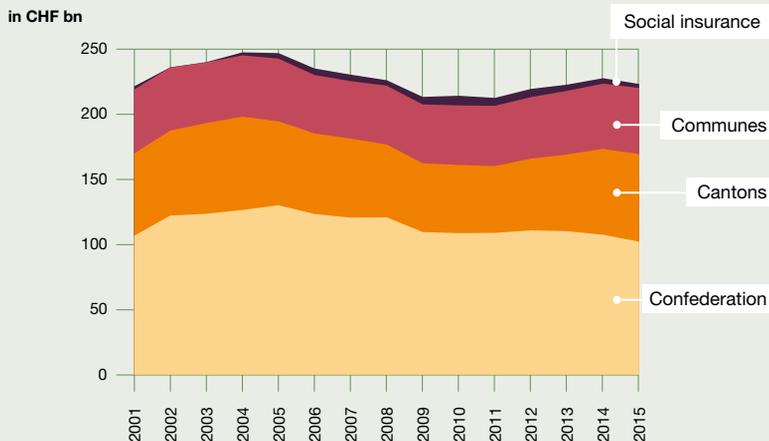

Expenditure of CHF 65.24 billion (2015)

Direct federal tax and VAT are the Confederation's main sources of receipts, and currently bring in a total of CHF 43 billion. Direct federal tax is raised on private individuals' income (progressively, maximum 11.5%), and on business profit (8.5%). VAT is 8% on most goods and services. The Federal Constitution sets out which taxes the Confederation is permitted to raise.

Three quarters of federal expenditure, CHF 22 billion, goes on social welfare. Half of this amount is spent on old-age insurance (OASI), and a good quarter on invalidity insurance (II). Other major areas of expenditure are health insurance (premium reductions), OASI supplementary benefits and migration. Social welfare is one of the fastest growing areas of federal expenditure.

Reducing debt

The Constitution requires the Confederation to balance its expenditure and receipts on a lasting basis. It is required to run a surplus when the economy is strong, and may spend more than it collects in receipts when the economy is weak. This 'debt brake' was applied for the first time in 2003. Since 2005 it has been possible to reduce the federal debt of CHF 130 billion by more than CHF 25 billion. By international standards, Switzerland is doing very well, with the total government debt ratio amounting to 34% of GDP.

From an alliance of states to a federal state

THE HISTORY OF SWITZERLAND

Switzerland developed over the centuries from a collection of different alliances to a confederation of states and finally to the federal state we know today. Its national borders and neutrality were established and recognised internationally in 1815. Its political system dates back to the Federal Constitution of 1848. Since then the powers of the federal government, political rights and political diversity have increased significantly.

1291 | Old Confederation

ALLIANCES

Shifting alliances between cities and outlying areas served to maintain internal political order and external independence. In 1291 the original forest cantons of Uri, Schwyz and Unterwalden entered into the first documented alliance. The term 'Eitgenoze' [Confederate] first appeared in 1315. In the following centuries, the Confederation continued to grow through alliances and territorial conquests.

1803–1814 | Mediation

LOOSE FOREIGN CONTROL

After civil wars broke out between federalists and supporters of the Helvetic Republic, Napoleon ordered a constitution based on the Act of Mediation, which restored some autonomy to the cantons and set most of the cantonal borders.

1847–1848 | Sonderbund War

LIBERALS AGAINST CONSERVATIVES

Diverging views on how the Confederation would be organised led to a civil war between liberal and Catholic conservative cantons. It was a war from which liberal forces emerged victorious.

1200

1850

1798–1802 | Helvetic Republic

UNITARY STATE UNDER FOREIGN CONTROL

Following the French invasion in 1798, the Confederation was transformed into the Helvetic Republic: a unitary state ruled from Paris.

1815 | Federal Treaty

NEUTRALITY AND ALLIANCE OF STATES

With the defeat of Napoleon, the great European powers recognised Swiss neutrality and set Switzerland's borders as they are today. The Federal Treaty of 1815 brought together the various federal alliances into a single confederation of states with responsibility for security policy.

1848 | Federal Constitution

DEMOCRATIC FEDERAL STATE

The Federal Constitution provided most citizens (men) with various rights and freedoms, including the right to vote and be elected (for women from 1971). The bicameral system, based on the American model, was introduced at federal level with the National Council and Council of States electing the Federal Council. Some powers were centralised. Switzerland developed into a unitary judicial and economic area.

1874, 1891 | Expanded democracy

INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM

The revised Federal Constitution transferred more tasks to the federal government and broadened democratic rights at federal level. The referendum was introduced in 1874 and the popular initiative in 1891. In 1891, Parliament elected the first Catholic Conservative (CVP today) to the government. For the first time since 1848, the Federal Council was no longer made up solely of Liberals.

1919, 1929 | Proportional representation

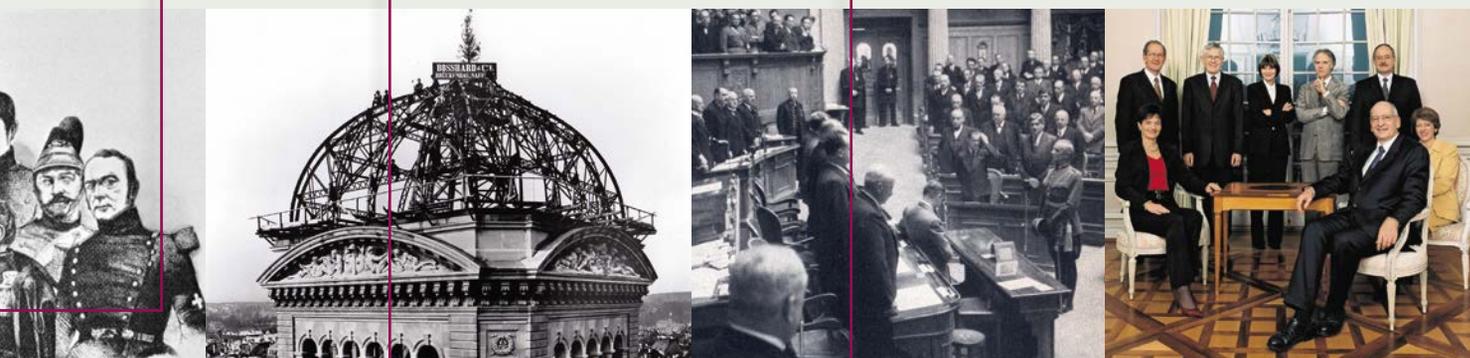

TOWARDS CONSENSUS DEMOCRACY

In 1919, the National Council was elected on a proportional basis and a second Catholic Conservative entered the Federal Council. A member of the Farmers', Trades' and Citizens' Party (SVP today) entered the Federal Council in 1929.

1959–2003 | Magic Formula

BRINGING DIVERSITY TO THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

The government was formed from representatives of the parties with the most votes: 2 FDP, 2 CVP, 2 SP, 1 SVP. This 'magic formula' remained in place until 2003. Since then the composition of the Federal Council has varied.

1900

2000

1914–1918 | First World War, general strike
SOCIALIST IDEAS

Poverty and unemployment during the First World War and socialist ideas from the Russian Revolution culminated in a general strike in 1918.

1939–1945 | Second World War
INCLUSION OF THE LEFT

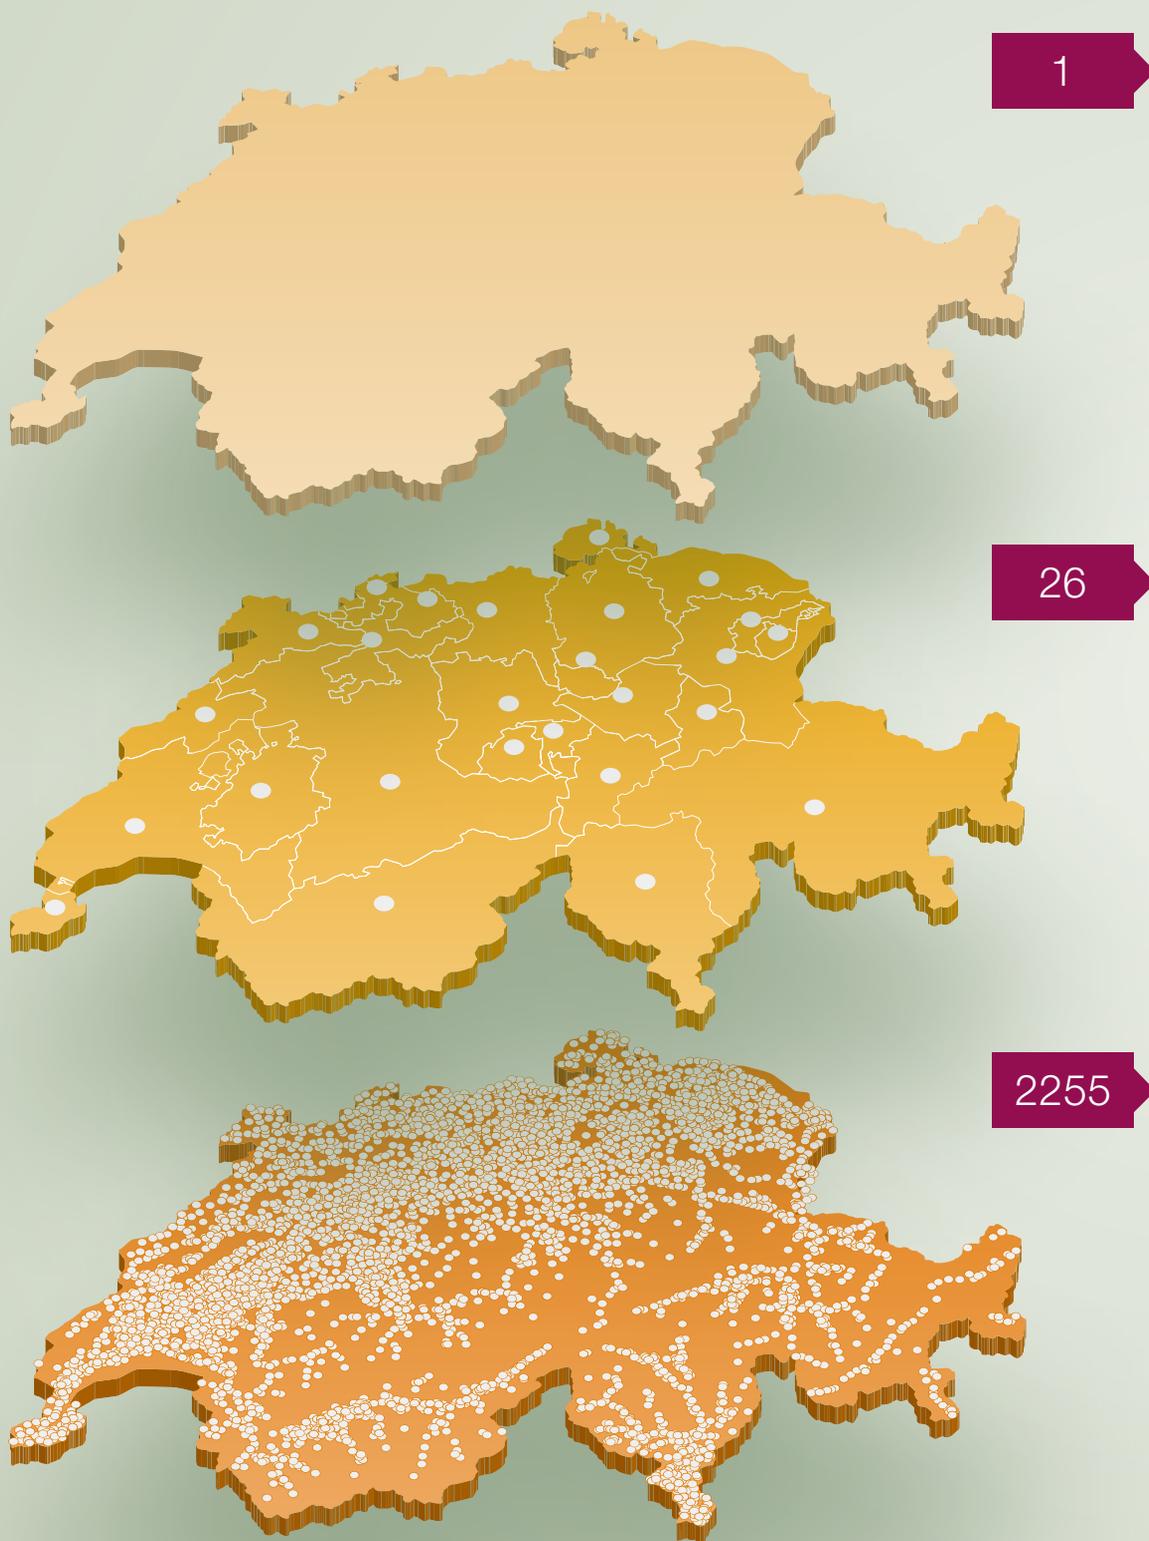

Under the perceived external threat, political forces from right to left closed ranks. In 1943, during the Second World War, Parliament elected a Social Democrat to the Federal Council.

2000 | Third Federal Constitution
CONTINUITY AND OPENNESS

The totally revised Federal Constitution emphasised the partnership between the Confederation and the cantons, and regulated the division of tasks. In 2000, Swiss voters approved the bilateral agreements between Switzerland and the European Union. Two years later they voted in favour of joining the United Nations.

Confederation, cantons and communes

FEDERALISM

Switzerland is a federal state: state power is shared between the federal government, the cantons and the communes. The cantons and communes have broad scope in carrying out their responsibilities. Federalism makes it possible for Switzerland to exist as one entity – in spite of four linguistic cultures and varying regional characteristics.

Confederation

Switzerland, which is also referred to as the Swiss Confederation, has been a federal state since 1848. The Federal Constitution defines the Confederation's tasks and responsibilities. These include Switzerland's relations with the outside world, defence, the national road network, and nuclear energy. Switzerland's Parliament, the Federal Assembly, is made up of the National Council and the Council of States; the government comprises seven federal councillors, and the Federal Supreme Court is responsible for national jurisprudence. The Confederation is financed among other means through direct federal tax.

- 10 per cent of all Swiss citizens live outside Switzerland (the 'Swiss Abroad').
- 85 per cent of the domestic population lives in urban areas.
- Proceeds from direct federal taxation account for approximately 30 per cent of the Confederation's total revenues.

Cantons

The Confederation is made up of 26 cantons, which are also known as 'states'. Each canton has its own parliament, government, courts and constitution. The cantonal constitutions may not contradict the Federal Constitution. The cantons implement the requirements of the Confederation, but structure their activities in accordance with their particular needs. They have broad scope in deciding how to meet their responsibilities, for example in the areas of education and healthcare, cultural affairs and police matters. The individual cantons levy a cantonal tax.

- Gross domestic product per capita in the canton of Basel-Stadt is more than three times higher than in the canton of Uri.
- In the national fiscal equalisation plan, 7 cantons are net contributors and 19 cantons are net beneficiaries.
- People's assemblies (Landsgemeinden) are still held in the cantons of Appenzell Innerrhoden and Glarus.

Communes

The 26 cantons are divided into communes. Each canton determines itself the division of responsibilities between it and the communes. The responsibilities of the communes include local planning, running the schools, social welfare and the fire service. Larger communes and cities have their own parliaments, and organise their own referendums. In smaller communes, decisions are made by the citizens at communal assemblies. Each commune levies a communal tax.

- The smallest commune (Corippo, TI) has a population of 13, the largest approximately 391 000 (City of Zurich).
- An average of approximately 30 communes merge every year, thereby reducing the total number of communes.
- In four out of five communes, eligible voters decide on political issues at communal assemblies.

A fundamental principle of democracy

SEPARATION OF POWERS

The separation of powers prevents a concentration of power in individual people or institutions and helps to stop any abuse of power. Power is divided between the three branches of state, the legislature, the executive and the judiciary. No single person can belong to more than one of the three branches of state at any one time. Switzerland introduced the separation of powers with the new federal state in 1848.

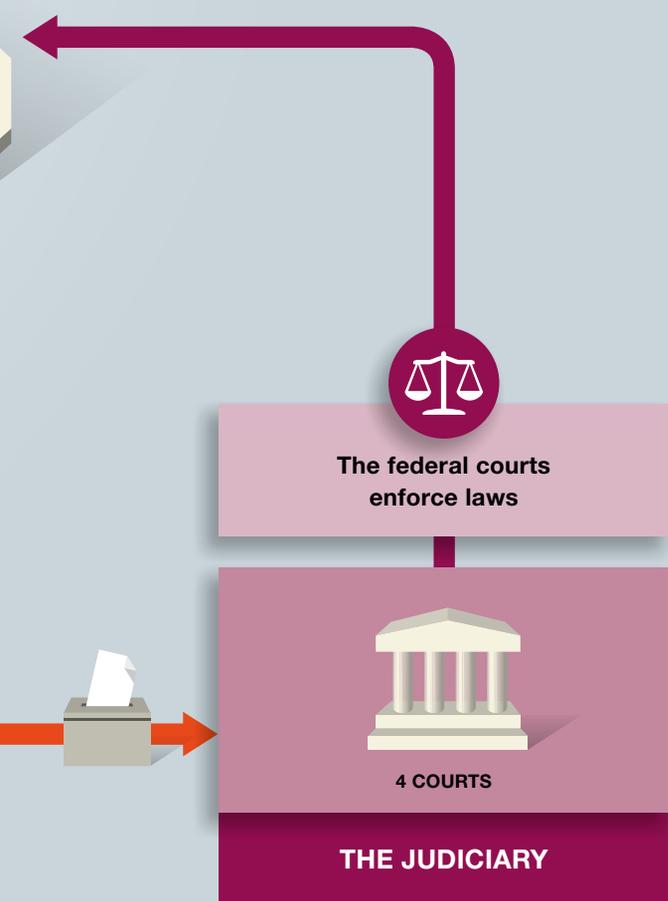

Implementing laws

The Federal Council is the Swiss government. It deals with the ongoing task of governing the country and implements the laws and other decisions adopted by parliament. Each of the seven members of the Federal Council is head of one of the seven federal departments, which together with the Federal Chancellery make up the Federal Administration.

Passing laws

Parliament comprises the National Council and the Council of States. The two councils have equal powers; together they form the United Federal Assembly. Parliament enacts legislation and monitors the activities of the Federal Council and the Federal Supreme Court.

Interpreting laws

The Federal Supreme Court is Switzerland's highest court. Its task is to ensure the uniform application of the law and to uphold the rights of ordinary people. As the highest court of appeal, it also rules on disputes between individuals and the state or between the Confederation and the cantons.

Who elects whom?

In Switzerland, around 5.3 million men and women can vote in federal elections. Young people under the age of 18 and foreign nationals do not have the right to vote at federal level.

Swiss voters elect the Parliament (the legislature). This makes the electorate Switzerland's supreme political body. The National Council represents the entire population, while the Council of States represents the 26 cantons. Federal elections are held every four years.

Parliament elects the members of various bodies:

- the executive: the seven members of the Federal Council and the Federal Chancellor. Their term of office is four years and they may be re-elected. (► p. 40)
- the judiciary: the President of the Federal Supreme Court and the judges of the Federal Supreme Court and the three federal courts of first instance. (► p. 78)
- the Attorney General of Switzerland: The Office of the Attorney General of Switzerland investigates and prosecutes federal offences, such as those involving explosives and espionage, as well as offences committed by federal employees in the course of their duties.
www.bundesanwaltschaft.ch

Who checks whom?

Parliament supervises the Federal Council and the Federal Administration, the federal courts and the Office of the Attorney General. The members of parliament are elected, and may be held to account, by the People.

Political rights

ELECTIONS AND VOTES

In Switzerland, the people have more say in how the country is run than in almost any other country in the world. All Swiss citizens who are 18 or over have the right to vote at national level. In addition to the parliamentary elections, which are held every four years, the electorate can express its views up to four times a year in popular votes on specific political issues. In most cases, there are several proposals to be voted on at each ballot.

The Constitution and laws

A vote must be held on any amendment to the Constitution (mandatory referendum). Amendments to the Constitution require the consent of a majority of the People and of the cantons (double majority). On the other hand, a vote is only held on a revised or new law if a referendum is demanded. The new law is accepted if a majority of the electorate vote in favour of it (simple majority).

Polling calendar 2017

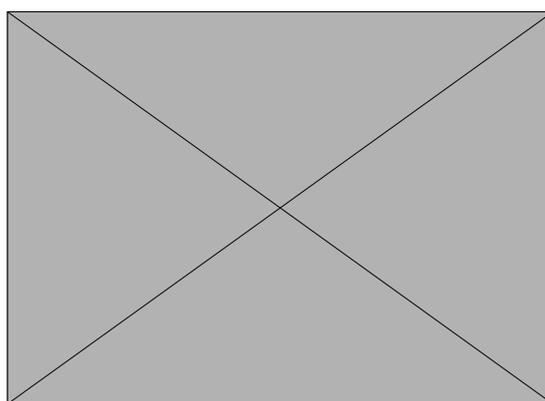

The Federal Council decides at least four months in advance which proposals will be voted on. The dates on which the ballots will be held are known long before then: currently all the dates have been fixed from now until 2035.

In 2017, federal ballots will be held on the following Sundays: 12 February, 21 May, 24 September and 26 November.

Videos about the proposals being voted on:

ELECTORAL RIGHTS

Electing and being elected

Anyone who is eligible to vote is not only entitled to vote in the elections to Parliament, but can also stand as a candidate in the elections. Swiss citizens living abroad are also eligible to vote in elections to the National Council and, in some cantons, the Council of States.

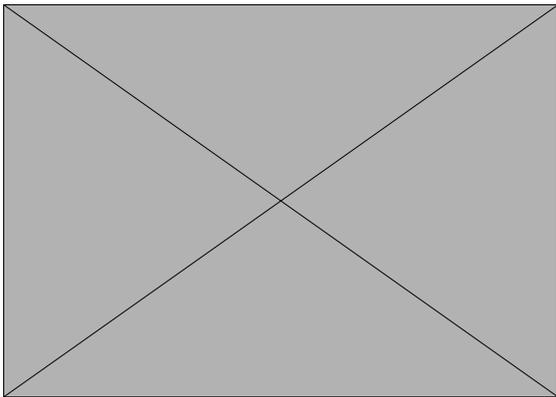

National Council and Council of States

The 200 members of the National Council and the 46 members of the Council of States are elected directly by the people. Elections are held every four years by secret ballot. The only exception is the canton of Appenzell Innerrhoden, where the People's Assembly (Landsgemeinde) still chooses its representative in the Council of States by a show of hands.

- Turnout in the 2015 federal elections was 48%.
- In 2015, 1308 women and 2480 men stood for election to the National Council.
- At federal level, women have had the right to vote since 1971.

DIRECT DEMOCRATIC INSTRUMENTS

POPULAR INITIATIVE

Changing the Constitution

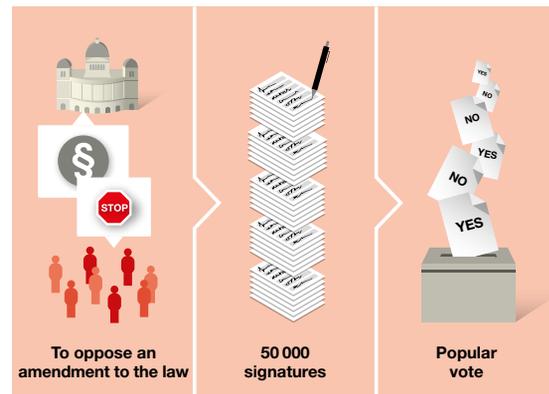

Citizens can launch a popular initiative to demand a change to the Constitution – but not to any other form of law. Any Swiss citizen who is eligible to vote can sign a popular initiative, and a group of at least seven citizens (the initiative committee) can launch their own popular initiative.

100,000 signatures

Before a vote is held on a popular initiative, the initiative committee must collect 100,000 valid signatures in favour of the proposal within a period of 18 months. The Federal Council and Parliament will recommend whether the proposal should be accepted or rejected. For the proposal to be accepted, a majority of both the People and the cantons is needed (a double majority). If it is accepted, new legislation or an amendment to existing legislation is normally required to implement the new constitutional provision.

- Popular initiatives were introduced at federal level in 1891.
- 209 popular initiatives have been voted on since then. Only 22 have been accepted.
- On 31.12.2016, 7 initiatives were at the signature collection stage, 13 were pending review by the Federal Council or Parliament, but none was ready to vote on.

OPTIONAL REFERENDUM

Putting a stop to a new law

Parliament passes new legislation and amendments to existing legislation. Citizens can respond by calling for a referendum on new laws and against certain international treaties. The right to request a referendum is an important element in Swiss direct democracy.

50,000 signatures

Swiss citizens who are eligible to vote can sign a request for a referendum. For a referendum to be held, it must be demanded by eight cantons (referendum requested by the cantons) or 50,000 valid signatures must be collected within 100 days. The new law comes into force if a majority of those voting say yes (a simple majority). If the majority vote no, the current law continues to apply.

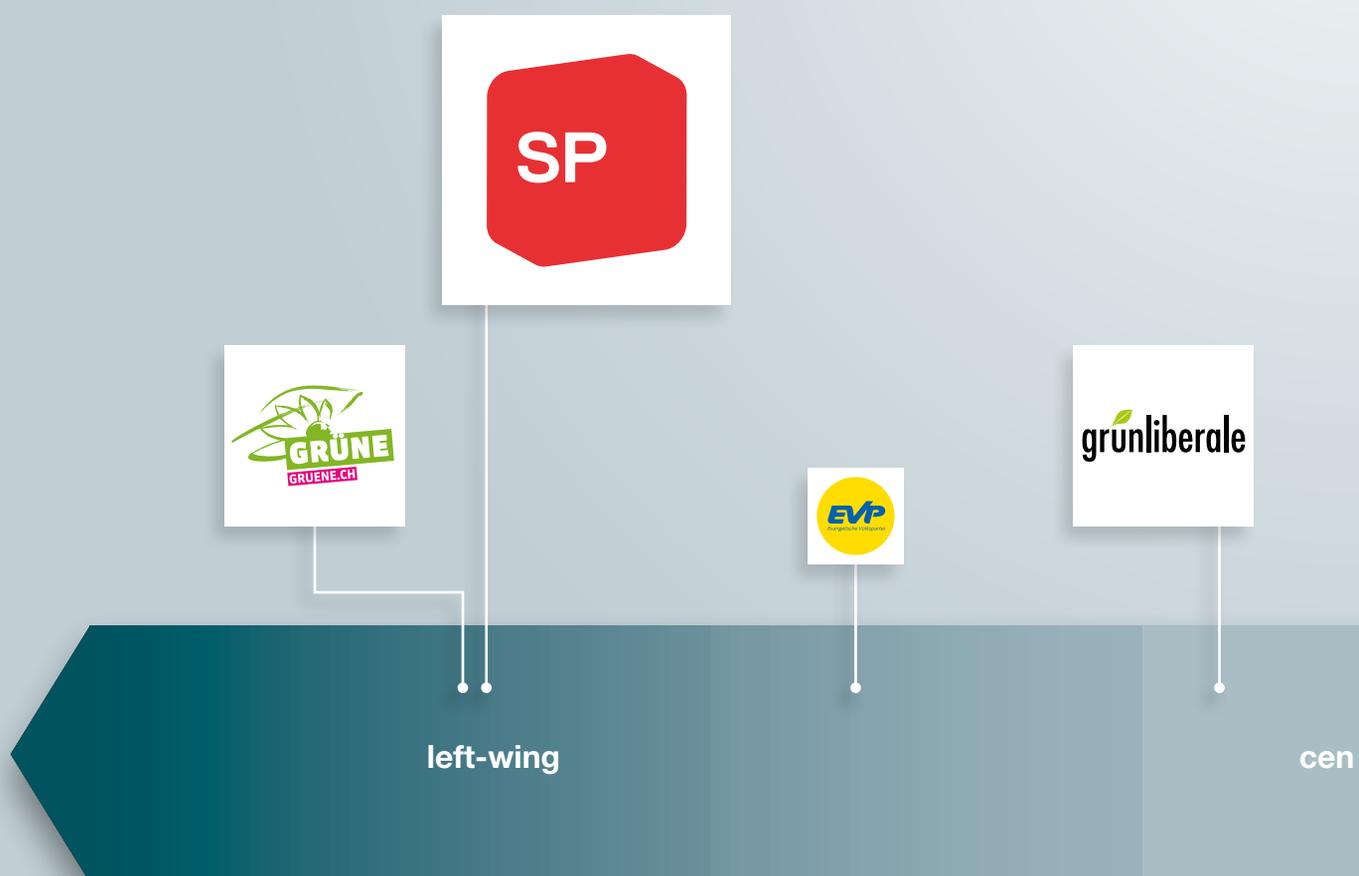

- The referendum was introduced in 1874.
- Since then, 182 optional referendums have been held, 78 of which were unsuccessful.
- As of 31.12.2016, signatures were being collected for 28 referendums, while one optional referendum was ready to be voted on.

The link between the people and the state

PARTIES FROM LEFT TO RIGHT

Political parties are indispensable if democracies are to work. They help to form political opinion, nominate candidates for public office and launch initiatives and referendums. Parties differ from one another in terms of their views of the role of the state, society and the economy.

Whereas left-wing parties tend to advocate a highly developed social state, right-of-centre parties advocate a liberal economic policy and personal responsibility. Certain political issues are neither distinctly left- nor right-wing, i.e. environmental protection, the question of how open Switzerland should be towards the EU and interna-

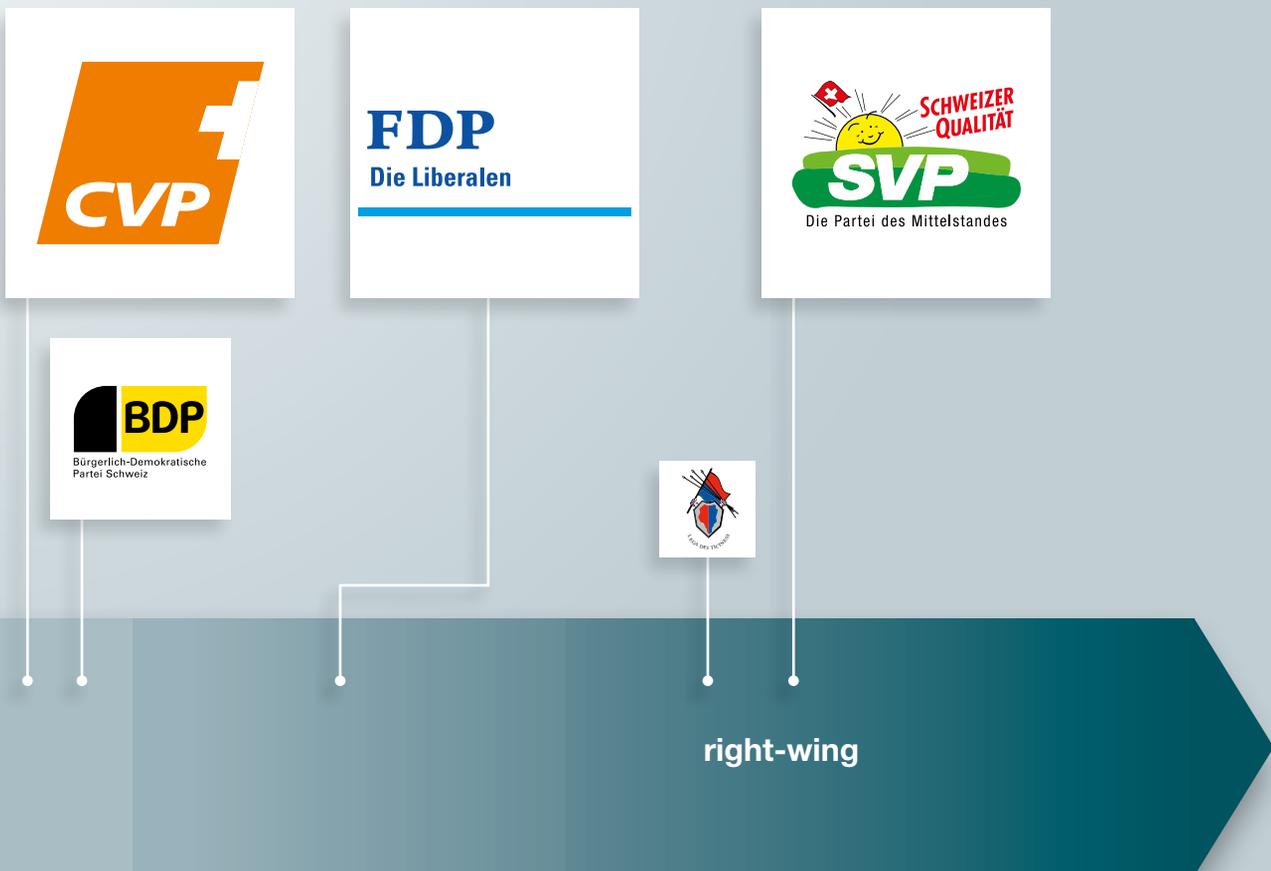

What does 'left-wing' mean?

- A strong social state that levels social disparities
- Emphasis on employees' interests
- Price controls, public services
- More peace policy, less military tional organisations, and issues regarding liberal values (e.g. same-sex partnerships). Depending on the issue, centre parties will cooperate with either left- or right-wing parties.

Switzerland's political landscape comprises many different parties, of which none holds a majority at federal level.

There are four parties that each make up ten per cent or more of seats in the National Council (SVP: 29%, SP: 19%, FDP: 16%, CVP: 12%). Most parties are represented in all language regions. However, a party's stance on individual issues can vary significantly depending on the language region and canton.

What does 'right-wing' mean?

- Freedom and personal responsibility; the state intervenes only where absolutely necessary
- Emphasis on employers' interests
- Free enterprise, economic incentives
- A strong national defence

POLITICAL PARTIES IN BRIEF

In the current legislature period 2015–2019, twelve political parties are represented in the National Council. Six of those are also represented in the Council of States, four in the Federal Council. Brief outlines of the political parties represented at federal level are presented here. The order reflects the number of seats they hold in the Federal Assembly.

Two chambers – one parliament

NATIONAL COUNCIL AND COUNCIL OF STATES

Representing the People and the cantons

Switzerland's Parliament or legislature consists of two chambers, which although they have equal powers are very different in their own way: the people's representatives sit in the National Council, the large chamber, and the representatives of the cantons sit in the Council of States, the small chamber. When sitting together in joint session, they constitute the United Federal Assembly. The 246 members of Parliament represent the interests of the different language communities, political parties, world views and regions in Switzerland.

The 200 members of the National Council represent the roughly 8 million people living in Switzerland – each member of the National Council represents around 40,000 people. The largest delegation, which is from the canton of Zurich, has 35 members. As the Constitution states that every canton is entitled to at least one seat in the National Council, even Appenzell Innerrhoden, which only has a population of 16,036, sends a people's representative to Bern.

The 46 members of the Council of States represent the cantons, whereby each canton has two representatives, although here too there is an exception: as former half-cantons, the cantons of Obwalden, Nidwalden, Basel-Stadt, Basel-Landschaft, Appenzell Ausserrhoden and Appenzell Innerrhoden each have only one representative. The members of the Council of States are directly elected.

The National Council and the Council of States generally sit separately, but they also handle certain items of business in joint session as the United Federal Assembly, for instance when electing the members of the Federal Council and federal court judges. As such, the Federal Assembly is the highest authority in the Swiss Confederation, subject to the rights of the people and the cantons. This is an aspect peculiar to Switzerland: in contrast to other countries, Parliament elects the government and the federal judiciary. Parliament's decisions are not subject to review by any court.

United Federal Assembly

The United Federal Assembly sits in the National Council chamber. While the members of the National Council sit in their usual seats, the members of the Council of States take up seats allocated to their respective cantons around the back wall of the chamber. The sessions are chaired by the President of the National Council, which is why he or she is often referred to as the highest ranking person in the country.

Chamber of the National Council

The two ways to Parliament

Elections to the National Council take place in autumn every four years according to harmonised national rules under a system of proportional representation. Each canton forms a constituency and receives at least one seat.

Elections to the Council of States are held according to cantonal law, and are held under a majority or first-past-the-post system except in the cantons of Jura and Neuchâtel. They are held at the same time as the National Council elections in all cantons except Appenzell Innerrhoden, which elects its representative at a later date. There is therefore no full election for the Council of States and consequently no legislature period.

There are significant differences between the two chambers in terms of the party political make-up, due in part to the electoral system: in the National Council the SVP is currently by far the strongest party with 65 members, followed by the SP with 43, the FDP-Liberals with 33 and the CVP with 27 representatives. However, in the Council of States the CVP and the FDP have 13 seats each, the SP 12, and the SVP 5.

Majority system and proportional representation

Under proportional representation, seats are allocated according to the number of votes received by the parties and then to the best-placed candidates in those parties. This system enables even small parties to enter Parliament.

Under the majority system (first-past-the-post), the person elected is the one with the most votes. This method tends to favour large parties and well-known candidates.

In the Council of States, the fact that the vote of each canton carries the same weight regardless of its size and population creates a certain equilibrium between large and small cantons.

Fresh elections every four years

Following the elections at the end of a legislature period around 30 per cent of seats go to new members. In the course of a legislature period around 10 per cent of council members step down and are replaced. The next general elections will be held in 2019.

Elected – what now?

HOW PARLIAMENT IS ORGANISED

Parliamentary bodies

Any large group needs rules in order to function properly, and the same is true of Parliament: each council member is allocated a seat in the chamber, with members of the same party usually grouped together. At the first session of the new legislature period, each chamber elects a president and the members of the Council Office. The president chairs the council meetings. He or she is supported by the council secretariat and may be represented by one of the vice presidents if necessary.

The Office, an important body behind the scenes, takes decisions on the session's agenda and therefore sets the timetable for debates. It appoints the members of the committees and delegations and also instructs them on which items of business are to be prepared between the sessions.

The members of a party or parties with similar views form parliamentary groups. At least five members from one council are needed to form a parliamentary group. The level of financial support that these groups receive for their political work depends on their size. In the National Council, only members of a parliamentary group have the right to express their views on an item of business. Furthermore, membership of a parliamentary group is also a prerequisite to be granted a seat on a committee. It is therefore only really possible for members to play an active role if they belong to a parliamentary group. That is why parties with fewer than five members of Parliament are keen to join a group. They are also courted, because the more members a parliamentary group has, the more seats they are entitled to on committees and the greater influence they have on council business.

Given the volume of business they have to deal with, often on technical issues, it is difficult for council members to reach an informed opinion. Before an item of business comes before the council, it is therefore discussed within the parliamentary groups with the aim of agreeing on a common position which can be supported by the members of the group in the chamber and before the media and general public. However, when the matter is voted on in the chamber, members are not instructed how to vote. Council members may not vote on the instruction of another person; their vote may therefore deviate from the position of their parliamentary group or canton.

The committees provide an opportunity for matters to be discussed in greater detail, to clarify specific issues, hear experts from the administration or from the interest groups concerned, and address questions to federal councillors. They also serve as a testing ground to see whether a majority can be found for certain positions or ideas across party lines.

Sessions

Four regular three-week sessions are held each year, generally in March, June, September and December. The number of days Parliament sits is still almost the same as it was when the Swiss Confederation was founded in 1848.

Often a special session is added between the spring and summer sessions to alleviate the workload. Each council can convene a special session with a simple-majority decision.

Schedules of sessions 2017:
www.parliament.ch > Sessions

Competences

The main role of Parliament is to enact legislation. The spectrum is wide, ranging from the Swiss abroad to civilian service, environmental protection to motorway building, war material to peace promotion.

However, Parliament is also responsible for:

- releasing funding (budget) and approving the state accounts;
- overseeing the Federal Council, the Federal Administration and the federal courts;
- electing the members of the Federal Council and the federal courts and the Federal Chancellor;
- concluding international agreements for which the Federal Council is not responsible and
- fostering relations with foreign parliaments.

Discussion on the fringes of the debate

Training for the top job

Presiding over the chamber is a demanding job. In addition, the term of office is limited to one year. Given that a first and second vice president is also elected, there is effectively a two-year training period in which the future office holder has time to learn the ropes. So despite the frequent rotations, a large degree of continuity is maintained.

Women in Parliament

Women in Switzerland have only had the right to vote and be elected since 1971. Their share of seats in Parliament has risen from 5 per cent in 1971 to 29 per cent today. In comparison, on average roughly 22 per cent of parliamentary seats worldwide are held by women; that figure is around 40 per cent in the Scandinavian countries. The country with the highest share of women in parliament is Ruanda at over 60 per cent.

Is Parliament getting younger?

Around twenty years ago, most council members were between 40 and 60 years old; in the 1920s, a fifth of representatives were under 40. Today, there is a relatively even spread of age groups. Currently the youngest member is 28 and the oldest is 74.

Two equals

THE LARGE AND SMALL CHAMBERS

The two-chamber system creates a balance between the large and small cantons and gives more power to the various linguistic regions. A two-chamber system is not always the norm – in many countries, parliament has only one chamber. Where there are two chambers, generally speaking the larger chamber, which in most cases represents the electorate, has a greater say than the smaller chamber, which often represents the regions. In Switzerland, the situation is different: both chambers have the same powers and deal with the same business in the same way. This also applies to budgetary matters. The two councils take turns to debate items of business first. Both councils must reach reconcilable decisions if the decisions are to be valid. Even the individual members of the Council of States and the National Council have the same rights: any member can submit a draft law or mandate to the Federal Council. Two chambers with completely equal rights are also found in the United States Congress, where the Senate and House of Representatives have identical powers. In Europe on the other hand, Switzerland is the only country that has this system. Even the cantons have only one chamber of parliament.

Draft laws are debated up to three times by each council so that identical decisions can ultimately be reached. Sometimes this can be difficult, but in most cases it can be achieved because each council is ready to make compromises and adjustments, even though neither chamber operates in quite the same way. Due to differences in their political composition, they often do not reach the same result when they vote. In addition, the Council of States is more representative of the cantons than the National Council. The size of the chambers also has an influence: the 46 members of the Council of States can speak out at any time on any matter, whereas complex rules apply on when the 200 members of the National Council are allowed to speak, which makes spontaneous speeches rare. For this reason, it is easier to influence the result of a vote in the Council of States by presenting strong arguments than in the National Council.

It often takes quite some time before both chambers agree on identical wording for a new law. But when the decision has finally been taken and the hurdle of a potential referendum has been overcome, the new law has proper substance. The predictability and stability of political decisions is a key factor in Switzerland's success and prosperity.

Alliances

No parliamentary group can get an item of business through Parliament alone; to achieve this they need to form alliances with other groups. In most cases where controversial issues are concerned, Parliament tends to divide into a conservative and a left-leaning camp. Ultimately, whether a proposal is accepted or rejected is decided by the political centre, depending on which camp it joins. Occasionally, an 'unholy alliance' emerges from the debate, i. e. one where the left (the SP and the Greens) and the right (SVP) coalesce to push through fundamental changes to a proposal or to overturn one – sometimes for completely opposing reasons.

PARLIAMENTARY MECHANISMS

Parliamentary instruments

Any member of the National Council or the Council of States can submit a procedural request to introduce a new law, add a new provision to the Constitution, or have an existing law amended. They can also request the Federal Council or the Administration to provide a report or information.

Council members can use a parliamentary initiative to propose that Parliament itself enact a law – either by formulating the idea or even drafting the law itself. Using a motion, council members can prompt the Federal Council into drafting legislation. A postulate is used to ask the Federal Council to examine whether a new law or decree should be drafted or measures taken, while an interpellation is a request to the Federal Council to provide information on significant domestic or international events.

In response to every procedural request, the Federal Council and the Administration have to conduct enquiries and issue an opinion before the matter can be discussed and decided on, first in the relevant committee and then in the council concerned. Many long hours of work must therefore be put in before a procedural request is either accepted or rejected.

Majority support is required to follow up on procedural requests: in the preliminary consultation committees, or in either or both councils. As procedural requests generally relate to politically controversial matters, however, there is no guarantee that a majority can be secured.

Enthusiastic use is made of parliamentary instruments: in 1995 each council member filed an average of 3.9 procedural requests every year. By 2009, the high water mark (so far), this number had risen to 9.4. It then fell a little to 8 procedural requests per year and member in 2011. In 2016, a total of 1869 procedural requests were dealt with (updated 11.12.2016).

Committees

Many people may be surprised to find the chambers of the National Council and Council of States half empty and wonder if anyone is doing any work there. By the time any proposal is debated in the councils, most of the parliamentary work has already been done, and many preliminary decisions have been taken. This is the committees' job, as they conduct initial discussions on all items of business.

There are nine specialist committees, whose main task is to make a preliminary examination of legislative proposals. They are each responsible for a specific topic, such as transport, legal affairs, foreign affairs and social policy. In addition, there are the finance committees and the control committees, which oversee the federal finances and the activities of the Federal Council and the Administration.

In specific cases, a parliamentary investigation committee can investigate certain procedures and areas.

In contrast to sessions of the National Council and Council of States, committee sessions are not open to the public: holding meetings in camera is thought to facilitate a more open discussion among members. However, after meetings, the committees inform the media of the outcome.

National Council committees comprise 25 members each, while those in the Council of States have 13 members. Their composition depends on the relative strengths of the parliamentary groups. Between parliamentary sessions, the committees meet once or twice for a day or two.

SEMI-PROFESSIONAL PARLIAMENT

A part-time parliament

Switzerland's Parliament is a semi-professional body: its members dedicate a great deal of time to their parliamentary work, but most continue to pursue other professional activities. Due to the high workload – and the increasingly complex range of subject matter – voices can occasionally be heard questioning the present system and calling for a professional parliament. The counter argument is that part-time politicians are more grounded, accessible to the people and able to make a valuable contribution to debates due to their professional experience and expertise.

The members of the Federal Assembly spend a lot of time in Bern. In addition to their attendance during the sessions, council members also have to come to Bern for committee meetings. Members of the National Council sit on one to two committees, while their colleagues in the Council of States sit on three to four committees. This means that National Council members are in Bern for an additional 30 to 50 days a year, and those in the Council of States are in the capital for an extra 40 to 70 days a year.

Professional diversity

Although around 18 per cent of National Council members and 40 per cent of those in the Council of States are full-time politicians, most continue to pursue other professional activities, ranging from medicine or law to the trades, business to professional associations. Farmers, bankers and communal politicians can also be found among the parliamentarians in Bern.

Regular income

In line with the relevant regulations, parliamentarians are entitled to the following remuneration:

- Annual salary to prepare for parliamentary work: CHF 26 000
- Daily allowance for council and committee attendance: CHF 440
- Annual allowance for staff and material expenses: CHF 33 000

On top of that there are allowances for food, travel and accommodation, pension fund as well as additional expense allowances for council and committee presidents and vice presidents. A portion of those allowances are tax free.

Depending on the number of attendance days and the council member's functions, the salary and allowances can amount to between CHF 130 000 and 150 000 a year.

The hub of Parliament

THE PARLIAMENTARY SERVICES

From IT support to preparing and following up on committee meetings – the Parliamentary Services support council members in fulfilling their duties. In terms of the separation of powers it is answerable to Parliament and operates independently of the Federal Council and the Federal Administration.

The start of a new term of office for a newly elected member of the Federal Assembly is comparable with starting a new job: the new deputy has a host of questions, is inundated with information, expected to hit the ground running, but first has to become acquainted with how Parliament works. At the start of a new legislature period, the Parliamentary Services with its 314 staff (217 full-time equivalents) has a great deal to do.

When Parliament is in session, all the various units of the Parliamentary Services are kept busy: from the front desk to the desks of the council presidents, from council members' workstations to the restaurant, from the smallest to the largest meeting rooms – behind the scenes and in full public view.

The debates are written up while the session is still in progress and published in the Official Bulletin, so that individual statements and the results of the votes can be read online at www.parliament.ch around an hour later.

Diverse range of services

Things are slightly calmer in between sessions, but even then there are often committee meetings. These are usually prepared by the relevant committee secretariats with practical support provided by the team of ushers. In order to prepare for the committee meetings, members are provided with all the necessary documentation so they can familiarise themselves with the varied subject matter, such as reports from federal offices, articles from the press or specialist literature and the minutes of earlier meetings. Council members can request personalised documentation packs and advice for more in-depth information, or to help prepare for visits at home or abroad.

The work of the Parliamentary Services also includes drafting press releases, arranging press conferences, organising visits by Swiss delegations abroad and receiving foreign delegations in Bern. Here too the Parliamentary Services assist council members in word and deed.

Information online and in all official languages

Council members can find most of the information they need on the intranet. Each council member receives a laptop if they wish, or at least the necessary codes to log in to Parliament's IT network. A team of IT staff and web specialists is responsible for running and maintaining the entire IT infrastructure for the Parliamentary Services and the secretariats of the parliamentary groups. The Parliament website also has to be kept up to date so that the public can find out about parliamentary business, council members and events. During the sessions debates are streamed live online.

Council members speak before Parliament and in the committees in their own language. During sessions in the National Council, interpreters provide simultaneous translation of statements in the three official languages, German, French and Italian. Most documents are also translated.

The public can follow what their representatives are doing not only through the media and online, but also in person from the gallery. Council members receive individual visitors or groups at the Parliament Building and visitors can also find out more about the building and proceedings by taking a guided tour.

A large number of people from different walks of life pass through the doors of the Federal Palace: parliamentarians, representatives of different interest groups and the media, civil servants and visitors. For an open building such as this, a certain number of security measures and staff have to be in place. It also has to be looked after. The activities that take centre stage would not be possible without all the work done behind the scenes: work would soon grind to a halt if the wastepaper baskets were never emptied, if there was no heating in winter or if there was nowhere to get a coffee...

THE OFFICIAL BULLETIN

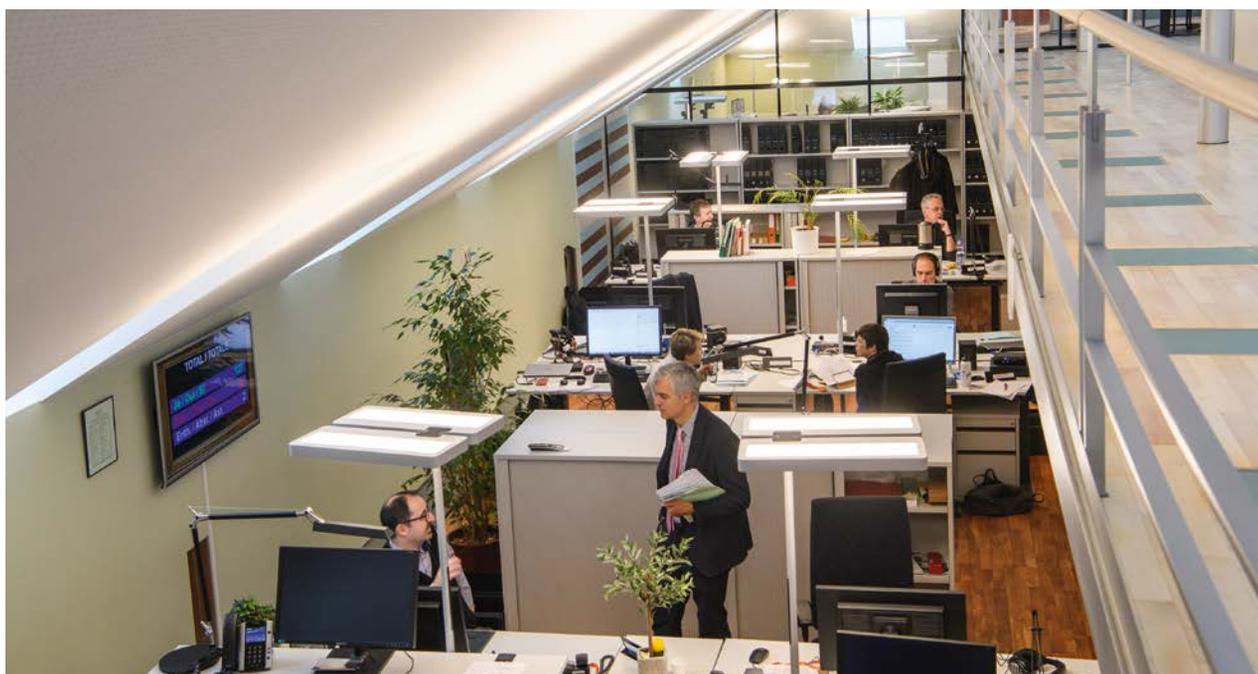

The actual legislative process in the councils comes after countless discussions and often long debates. A written record is kept of negotiations, allowing anyone to see, at a later date, how the decisions in the National Council and in the Council of States were reached. These records are published in the Official Bulletin, and at rapid speed. There is only a slight delay between the discussions and publication of the minutes of the session meetings, and full coverage of the discussions is already available online by the end of the day of the meetings, at the latest.

Since the same information is expressed differently in oral speech than in a written text, the editors of the Official Bulletin need to edit and rewrite parts of the text before it is published. They also check numbers and amounts of Swiss francs to make sure they are correct, and they consult Federal Council dispatches and other documents to ensure correspondence with the published text. As soon as the text is released, it immediately appears on the Official Bulletin's website. All speeches are cross-checked the same day. In addition to checking spelling and punctuation, this read through primarily serves to ensure consistency of syntax throughout the text.

Around 20 trained editors work during the sessions to convert speech into written text; 7 of them edit the French speeches, 2 of them the Italian speeches and the remainder the German speeches.

The Official Bulletin belongs to the legal material used for the legislative process and must therefore meet the highest standards of precision, even under great time pressure. In addition to council members and parliamentary committees, the media and citizens also enjoy access to the Official Bulletin, which is available in print, or on a computer, a tablet or a smartphone.

HOW NEW LAWS COME ABOUT

FEDERAL COUNCIL AND ADMINISTRATION

Postulate, consultations, dispatch to Parliament

In February 2009, the Transport and Telecommunications Committee of the National Council (TTC-N) submitted a postulate to the Federal Council, requesting it to draft a report in which various alternatives to the current method of levying radio and television reception fees would be proposed and evaluated. This request had been prompted by increasing problems with levying fees for radio and television connections. After the Federal Council submitted its report, the TTC-N requested the Federal Council to prepare a proposal on a new system for levying reception fees.

The Federal Department of the Environment, Transport, Energy and Communications (DETEC), the federal department concerned, then drafted an amendment to the law and conducted a consultation process from 9 May to 29 August 2012. On 29 May 2013, the Federal Council approved the dispatch on the revision of the Federal Act on Radio and Television.

Preliminary examination, proposal (TTC)

The Presiding Colleges of the National Council and the Council of States assigned the item of business to the National Council as the first chamber to debate the issue. The TTC-N carried out the preliminary examination and invited interest groups to a hearing, which voted 16 to 6 in favour of considering the draft law. In the detailed discussion the committee broadly accepted the Federal Council's proposal. In particular on 21 October 2013, it rejected by 14 votes to 10 the possibility for households not in possession of a radio or TV to opt out. In the overall vote the proposal was accepted by 14 votes to 7 with 3 abstentions.

Committee

First consultation

The National Council dealt with the item on 12 March 2014 in a debate that lasted almost seven hours. The question as to whether households without reception capability could be exempted from the fee provoked a broad discussion. As a compromise, the council voted in favour of a TTC-N minority proposal, according to which households without reception capability could be exempted for a further five years after the new fee was introduced. The question of whether companies would have to pay a fee of any kind in the future remained disputed. The National Council rejected by a very narrow margin of 93 votes to 92 a proposal that demanded that fees be completely abolished for businesses.

Resolution of differences

In the resolution of differences the item of business was then presented again first to the TTC-N, which focused exclusively on the controversial provisions. By 14 votes to 9, it instructed the National Council to stick to the five-year opt-out possibility for households. On four further points, however, the TTC-N swung over to the line of the Council of States.

Committee

Preliminary examination, proposal (TTC)

At its meeting on 1 April 2014, the TTC of the Council of States called unanimously for the draft law to be examined. Concerning the five-year opt-out inserted in the draft law by the National Council, the committee instructed that the provision be deleted by 12 votes to 1, thus accepting the Federal Council's draft. In the overall vote the proposal was accepted by 10 votes to 1 with 1 abstention.

Committee

First consultation

On 19 June 2014, the Council of States voted unanimously in favour of examining the proposal. In the course of a four-hour debate, the majority of the council followed the National Council's decision, but added some changes, whereupon the Council of States followed its advisory committee without opposition and rejected the proposed exceptions to the obligation to pay fees for households. In addition, the Council of States demanded greater scope for private broadcasters to share in fee revenues. It accepted, by 28 votes to 14, a minority proposal of the committee and set the share of the total revenues from radio and TV fees at 4 to 6 per cent.

INITIAL PHASE

PARLIAMENTARY PHASE

Introducing new legislation is a complex and at times protracted business. The process takes at least twelve months, and has been known to take as long as ten years or more.

The following example shows the partial revision of the Federal Act on Radio and Television (RTVA). The process began in 2009 and ended with the law's entry into force on 1 July 2016.

An open house

THE PARLIAMENT BUILDING

Construction in stages

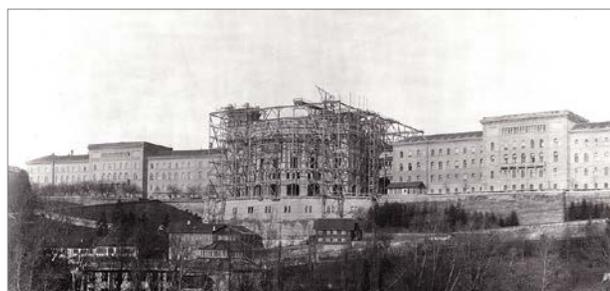

The Federal Palace, the seat of the Swiss parliament and government, is regarded as one of the most historically important buildings in Switzerland. It comprises three elements which are linked by raised covered walkways: the West Wing, the Parliament Building and the East Wing. In contrast to most other countries with a bicameral system, both chambers are housed under the same roof.

On 28 November 1848, the Federal Assembly, in a first round of voting, chose Bern to be the capital city and therefore the seat of the federal authorities. As there were no suitable existing buildings in Bern to house the government, Parliament and the Federal Administration, provisional solutions at first had to be found. The Erlacherhof on Junkerngasse was made available to the Federal Council, the National Council met in the 'Casino' music hall, built in 1821, and occasionally in Bern's city hall, while the Council of States met in the town hall 'zum Äusseren Stand' on Zeughausgasse. The Federal Supreme Court and the various branches of the Administration took up residence in various buildings in the old town.

In February 1849, the city authorities were commissioned with the task of finding an appropriate location for a central building with sufficient space to house both chambers of Parliament, rooms for the Federal Council, 96 offices and an apartment for the Federal Chancellor. The site chosen by the Federal Council from a number of proposals was that of the town's timber works next to the casino. On 8 April 1850, the city council launched a tender for designs for the 'Bundes-Rathaus' on the southern side of the old town on the edge of the escarpment above the River Aare.

Work on the construction of what is now the West Wing began in 1852 and was to house both chambers of parliament. The official inauguration took place a little over five years later on 5 June 1857. It was later joined by the mirror image East Wing in 1884.

The central Parliament Building, built according to plans drawn up by architect Hans Wilhelm Auer between 1894 and 1902, completed the inter-connected three-part complex that we see today.

The Parliament Building is a monumental work in the neo-renaissance style with porticos and a prominent dome. The rich artistry and construction materials from all regions of the country underline the character of the building as a national monument and as a 'Federal palace'.

The architect's intention in designing the Parliament Building was to replicate, figuratively, the whole of Switzerland. He drew up a plan of pictures and symbolic images covering three broad themes: the nation's history based on founding myths, the constitutional foundations and general virtues of the state, and Switzerland's cultural, political, geographic and economic diversity.

Who goes in and out of the Federal Palace

Even in an age of chatrooms, Skype and social media, there is still a need for a place where members of parliament can gather to hold meetings and discussions, as well as have informal chats.

The Federal Palace is above all the nation's meeting place: in addition to the parliamentary sessions held in the two largest chambers, around 2000 meetings a year are held in the many other conference rooms. The Parliament Building also has an important ceremonial and not least a social function: given its architecture it lends itself as a stage for the nation's political proceedings. Council sessions are public and attract a great deal of public interest. Politicians meet with groups of visitors from their home cantons, and foreign delegations are received in the richly decorated rooms. The lobby and restaurant provide a setting for more informal discussions, and there are also places where council members can sit down to work.

Media

Wherever there are political goings-on, the media are never far behind. For a number of years now there has been a large, modern media centre on Bundesgasse, but camera teams can still be found in the Federal Palace itself most days, looking for politicians to interview.

Lobbyists

Lobbyists representing the interests of associations, businesses or other organisations in Parliament also come and go: each member of parliament is entitled to name two people who may enter the Parliament Building as guests.

Seven equal members

The Federal Council is Switzerland's government. In 2015 the United Federal Assembly (joint session of National Council and Council of States) elected 5 men and 2 women to the Federal Council for a four-year term of office. In December 2016 Federal Councillor Doris Leuthard was elected President of the Swiss Confederation for one year. She is equal to the other members, but chairs cabinet meetings and represents the government. The Federal Chancellor is the Federal Council's chief of staff.

Managing government business

The Federal Council has the task of governing the country. Each member of the Federal Council heads a government department.

The Federal Council holds a regular meeting every week. Particularly complex matters are addressed at special meetings. It takes decisions on 2000 to 2500 items of business every year. The seven departments and the Federal Chancellery help to prepare the meetings.

The Federal Council plans and coordinates government activities based on its strategies and goals and then draws up the relevant draft legislation. The views of broad sections of the population and industry are gathered in a consultation process. The Federal Council then submits the proposal to Parliament for consideration. During the parliamentary deliberations, the federal councillors argue for the proposals put forward by their departments.

The Federal Council manages the Confederation's finances through the budget and the state accounts. The final decisions on those matters rest with Parliament.

Consensus and collegiality

The members of the Federal Council come from different cantons and are currently drawn from four political parties. Four members come from the German-speaking part of the country and three from the French-speaking part. The Italian-speaking region of Switzerland was last represented in the Federal Council between 1986 and 1999.

The Federal Council takes decisions as a collegial body: the members seek consensus to win majority support for their policies. They are also expected to defend the position of the Federal Council, even if it is contrary to their personal view or that of their party (principle of collegiality). In contrast to systems in other countries, there is no clear distinction between government and opposition.

From a one-party to a four-party government

- 1848 The Federal Council was composed of seven members of the Free Democratic Party (today FDP. The Liberals). The party governed alone for 43 years.
- 1891 The first member of the Catholic Conservatives (today CVP) joined the government; the second joined in 1919.
- 1929 The United Federal Assembly elected a member of the Farmers', Trades' and Citizens' Party (today SVP) to the Federal Council.
- 1943 The first Social Democrat (SP) entered the government; the second followed in 1951.
- 1959 The four strongest parties agreed to form a government by applying the 'magic formula': 2 FDP, 2 CVP, 2 SP, 1 SVP. The formula remained unchanged for 44 years.
- 2003 During the Federal Council elections, the SVP won a seat at the expense of the CVP.
- 2008 The two representatives of the SVP joined the newly founded Conservative Democratic Party (BDP).
- 2009 A member of the SVP was elected in place of a retiring BDP representative. The constellation was now 2 FDP, 2 SP, 1 SVP, 1 BDP, 1 CVP.
- 2015 The BDP representative stepped down. The United Federal Assembly elected an SVP representative in her place. The current constellation is: 2 FDP, 2 SP, 2 SVP, 1 CVP.

Creating opportunities: three trainee bakers from Slovakia who have completed a practice-oriented vocational training programme supported by Switzerland.

The head of the FDFA is Didier Burkhalter. He has been a member of the Federal Council since 2009. He began as head of the FDHA before moving to the FDFA in 2012.

Domestic and foreign policy are closely linked in Switzerland; Swiss political culture is an important point of reference in foreign policy strategy. Switzerland is committed to promoting democracy and the rule of law, dialogue and a culture of compromise, participation and power-sharing, and human rights and humanitarian principles throughout the world.

Switzerland is helping to improve prospects for young people in their own countries.

Improving prospects – promoting development and peace

Switzerland is committed to a world without poverty and to sustainable development. One of the many ways in which it pursues these aims is to enable young people in developing countries to get sound vocational training oriented to the needs of the market. This enables them to contribute to the economic and political development of their country, and improves the prospects for their future. This, in turn, reduces the pressure to emigrate and the power of extremist groups to attract followers. Switzerland operates in over 20 countries in international cooperation projects, working with the authorities and the private sector to promote vocational training, from which over 300,000 people have benefited so far. In view of the uncertain geopolitical situation, Switzerland is also expanding its engagement for peace, security and human rights.

Strengthening relations with neighbouring states and the EU

Switzerland lies at the heart of Europe. It shares the democratic values of its European partner countries, with which it has close political, economic and cultural ties. Nurturing and extending these relations with our immediate neighbours and with the European Union (EU) are thus a key element of Swiss foreign policy.

Extending relations with global partners

As an export-oriented country, Switzerland relies on having good, stable relations with other countries. It is therefore constantly expanding and strengthening its network of relationships. It maintains strategic partnerships with the USA, Brazil, Russia, India, China, South Africa and Turkey, and pursues a range of political, security, economic, environmental and migration policy objectives in Southeast and Eastern Europe, Central Asia, the Asia-Pacific region, the Americas, Africa and the Near and Middle East. Switzerland's intention is to contribute to solving global problems and to representing its own interests and values.

Federal Department of Foreign Affairs FDFA

The FDFA formulates and coordinates foreign policy on behalf of the Federal Council, safeguards Switzerland's interests, and promotes its values abroad. It acts on the basis of the rule of law, universality and neutrality and in a spirit of solidarity and shared responsibility. It operates a network of about 170 representations and 204 honorary representations.

Staff (full-time positions) 2015 5537

www.fdfa.admin.ch

General Secretariat GS-FDFA

Secretary General: Benno Bättig
www.fdfa.admin.ch

The General Secretariat coordinates parliamentary and Federal Council business; it is responsible for promoting equal opportunities, for gender issues and women's rights at the FDFA; for coordination of the internal control system and risk management in the Department; and for auditing, internal and external communications, overseeing the management of the representations abroad, and promoting equal opportunities. Presence Switzerland and the FDFA History Unit are also part of the General Secretariat.

State Secretariat

State Secretary: Pascale Baeriswyl

The State Secretariat assists the head of department in developing and planning foreign policy. The State Secretary is responsible for Switzerland's relations with other countries, the EU and the international organisations, as well as for policy on security, peace, human rights and humanitarian policy. The StS also includes Protocol, which is responsible for ensuring compliance with the Confederation's rules on protocol, and the Crisis Management Centre, which publishes advice on travelling in foreign countries (www.fdfa.admin.ch/reisehinweise) and coordinates measures to protect Swiss nationals who find themselves in situations of conflict or social unrest, or who experience accidents, natural disasters, attacks or are kidnapped while abroad.

Directorate of Political Affairs PD

Director: State Secretary Pascale Baeriswyl

The Directorate of Political Affairs observes and analyses the world political situation and is responsible for safeguarding Switzerland's interests abroad. The nine political affairs divisions and the representations abroad all report to the State Secretary.

The geographical divisions are responsible for Switzerland's bilateral relations with other countries; the United Nations and International Organisations Division is responsible for Switzerland's policy in these organisations; the Human Security Division determines Switzerland's activities in the fields of civilian peacebuilding, human rights, and foreign policy on migration and humanitarian policy; the Sectoral Foreign Policies Division coordinates foreign policy with regard to economic and environmental issues, transport, energy, health, education and science; and the Security Policy Division develops policy on international security.

Directorate of European Affairs DEA

Director: Henri Gétaz
www.fdfa.admin.ch/dea

The Directorate of European Affairs is the Swiss government's centre of expertise for all issues relating to Europe. It leads the negotiations with the EU in collaboration with the relevant specialised offices, coordinates Swiss policy on Europe, prepares decisions for the Federal Council, observes developments in the EU and European law, and analyses them and their consequences for Switzerland. In addition, the DEA is responsible for keeping the public informed about Switzerland's policy on Europe and European integration in general.

Directorate for Resources DR

Director: Jacques Pitteloud

The Directorate for Resources manages and ensures the efficient use of the FDFA's human, financial and IT resources. As the department's centre of expertise for all matters relating to resources, the DR provides logistical services to both the FDFA's head office in Bern and to Switzerland's worldwide network of representations, which it maintains and runs. The Swiss Government Travel Centre, which is the centre of expertise for business travel matters for the entire Federal Administration, is part of the DR.

Directorate of International Law DIL

Director: Roberto Balzaretto

The Directorate of International Law safeguards Switzerland's rights and interests that derive from international law. It participates in the conclusion of international treaties and deals with the legal aspects of Swiss neutrality, human rights and the Geneva Conventions. The Swiss Maritime Navigation Office is part of the DIL.

Consular Directorate CD

Director: Jürg Burri

As the central point of contact for Swiss nationals abroad, the Consular Directorate, together with the representations abroad, ensures the provision of efficient and friendly consular services worldwide. Within the Federal Administration it is the central coordination point for matters concerning Swiss citizens abroad. The CD coordinates the support the Confederation provides Swiss citizens abroad who need assistance. The FDFA Helpline (+41 800 24 7 365) is available 24/7, 365 days a year to answer enquiries. The CD also organises the issuance of visas together with the representations abroad.

Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation SDC

Director: Manuel Sager
www.fdfa.admin.ch/sdc

The Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation is responsible for the overall coordination of the Confederation's international development cooperation, cooperation with the countries of Eastern Europe and the CIS, and humanitarian assistance. It is active in the fight against poverty in the countries of the Global South and East, supports victims of crises and conflicts and, together with the Swiss Humanitarian Aid Unit, provides emergency and reconstruction aid following natural disasters and armed conflicts.

Federal Department of Home Affairs

FDHA

GOVERNMENT

The FDHA supports vocational training and equal opportunities for young people with disabilities so they can enter the world of work.

The head of the FDHA is Alain Berset. He has been a member of the Federal Council since 2012.

The Federal Department of Home Affairs (FDHA) deals with many everyday issues affecting people in Switzerland, such as retirement provision, healthcare and cultural matters. Swiss society is facing major challenges in these areas.

Encouraging a more flexible retirement age

In a few years' time, the baby-boom generation will reach retirement age, but in the occupational pension funds, returns on investments have been too low for years. For this reason, the Federal Council decided to launch the 'Retirement provision 2020' reform project, which provides for a comprehensive and transparent solution: the first and second pillars of the social insurance system are to be reformed jointly with the overriding objective of maintaining the current level of pensions. The retirement age will be set for all at 65, with a flexible transition to retirement between the ages of 62 and 70.

The 'Retirement provision 2020' reforms aim to safeguard pension levels.

Improving quality of care

The number of chronic illnesses is continually increasing, but the health system is strongly oriented towards the treatment of acute illnesses. In addition to ensuring a sharper focus on these new developments, transparency and controllability are to be improved. In responding to this situation, the Federal Council has adopted the 'Health 2020' strategy with the aim of raising the quality of provision, keeping costs under control and guaranteeing adequate access to healthcare for all. People and their well-being are the top priority of this strategy.

Enabling cultural participation

Culture and cultural life are facing radical changes including globalisation, digitalisation and individualisation. In this context the new Federal Council dispatch on culture sets three priorities for the period to 2020 with the aim of raising the active and passive participation of as many people as possible in cultural life, strengthening social cohesion in Switzerland's linguistic and culturally diverse society, and promoting creativity and innovation.

Federal Department of Home Affairs FDHA

The FDHA is at the heart of everyday life in Switzerland. The FDHA is responsible for old age and survivors' insurance and the second pillar of the social insurance system, health, accident and invalidity insurance, drug and food safety, and animal health. Cultural affairs, family policy, equal opportunities for men and women and for people with disabilities, the fight against racism, statistics and even weather forecasting are further areas that fall under the FDHA's remit.

As the national weather and climate service, MeteoSwiss is responsible for providing weather and climate information. Surface observation systems, weather radars, satellites, radio sounding and other instruments monitor the weather. MeteoSwiss warns the authorities and the public about approaching severe weather conditions and supplies basic data about climate change.

Federal Office of Public Health FOPH

Director: Pascal Strupler
www.foph.admin.ch

The FOPH and the cantons are jointly responsible for public health and for developing a national health policy. This includes the upkeep and development of social health and accident insurance and its supervision. The FOPH carries out prevention campaigns and programmes to promote healthy living. It works on behalf of the Federal Council and with partners to implement the 'Health 2020' strategy in order to adapt the Swiss healthcare system optimally to future challenges.

Federal Food Safety and Veterinary Office FSVO

Director: Hans Wyss
www.fsvo.admin.ch

The FSVO is responsible for food safety, nutrition, animal health and animal welfare, and supports the implementation in the cantons. It supervises imports of animals and animal products, and acts as the enforcement authority for the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). The FSVO is in charge of protecting the Swiss population from foodstuffs and utility articles which could pose risks to health or mislead consumers. The Institute of Virology and Immunology (IVI) is affiliated to the FSVO.

Federal Statistical Office FSO

Director: Georges-Simon Ulrich
www.statistics.admin.ch

The FSO is the federal office responsible for public statistics. It compiles statistical information on the current position and trends in demographics, the economy, society, education, research, land use and the environment. The information helps to shape public opinion and is used as an instrument for planning and control in key policy areas.

Federal Social Insurance Office FSIO

Director: Jürg Brechbühl
www.bsv.admin.ch

The FSIO is responsible for old age and survivors' insurance, invalidity insurance, supplementary benefits, occupational pension funds, compensation for loss of earnings for people on military or civilian service and women on maternity leave, and family allowances. In addition, it is also concerned with issues relating to family, children, youth and old-age, generational relationships and general socio-political issues.

Swiss Agency for Therapeutic Products Swissmedic

Director: Jürg H. Schnetzer
www.swissmedic.ch

Swissmedic is the national authorisation and supervisory authority for drugs and medical products. The agency ensures that only high-quality, safe and effective medical products are available in Switzerland, thus making an important contribution to the protection of human and animal health.

Swiss National Museum SNM

Director: Andreas Spillmann
www.nationalmuseum.ch

Three museums – the National Museum in Zurich, the Château de Prangins and the Forum of Swiss History in Schwyz, as well as the collections centre in Affoltern am Albis – are united under the umbrella of the Swiss National Museum (SNM). With more than 840,000 items, the SNM has the largest collection of cultural historic items and craftwork in Switzerland.

Swiss Arts Council Pro Helvetia

Interim director: Sabina Schwarzenbach
www.prohelvetia.ch

Pro Helvetia supports artistic creativity in Switzerland, promotes Swiss culture abroad, encourages an exchange between cultures and is committed to educating the public on cultural matters. As a public foundation, it assists the cantons and communes in promoting culture.

FDJP

Refugees taking classes to learn a national language – an important step towards integration. The federal government sets out the legal basis for integration measures and helps to finance them.

The head of the FDJP is Simonetta Sommaruga. She has been a member of the Federal Council since 2010.

Controlling immigration, improving integration

In February 2014, the Swiss electorate voted in favour of the initiative to control immigration (Mass Immigration Initiative). The Swiss government has since been working hard to find a way of implementing the initiative, under the lead of the FDJP. The Federal Council wants Switzerland to be able to control immigration, at the same time maintaining healthy and sound relations with Europe.

The new Asylum Act will also improve integration.

The electorate having voted in June 2016 to adopt the new Asylum Act, the FDJP is now working to implement its terms. Some parts of the revised law have been in force since 1 October 2016; for example, young asylum seekers may now attend school. The law also foresees speedier asylum application procedures, better integration measures for refugees, and greater consistency in returning rejected asylum seekers. For the asylum system to function, Switzerland needs to cooperate well with other countries. The FDJP therefore advocates a joint refugee policy that spreads the burden throughout Europe, and Switzerland supports people directly in the crisis regions.

Effectively combating terrorism

Switzerland, like other states, is frequently confronted with the question of how to combat terrorism effectively. ►

The FDJP ensures that laws exist enabling the courts and the police to bring criminal proceedings when necessary. Prevention is important too, and so the FDJP is involved in drawing up a National Action Plan against radicalisation.

Modernising family law and ensuring equal pay

In recent years, family law has been gradually brought up-to-date. A new law is now in force that allows divorced parents to have joint custody of their children, and a new law on adoption will soon be introduced. This is all designed to be in the best interests of children. Inheritance law is now also being revised and brought into line with the realities of modern society. And finally, the FDJP is working to ensure equal pay for men and women which has been a requirement of the Constitution for over 30 years; under instructions from the Federal Council, it is drawing up a draft act to this effect.

Federal Department of Justice and Police FDJP

The remit of the FDJP covers a wide range of matters. It deals with socio-political issues such as the coexistence of Swiss and foreign nationals, asylum issues or the fight against crime. Other areas of responsibility include the civil register and gambling supervision.

By making regular visits to penal institutions, the NCPT helps prevent the practise of torture and inhumane or humiliating treatment. It also ensures that the fundamental rights of persons who are forcibly repatriated by air are observed.

Independent Expert Commission tasked with Conducting a Scientific Review of Administrative Detention

President: Markus Notter
www.uek-administrative-versorgungen.ch

The commission was established by the Federal Council at the end of 2014 to methodically review the administrative detentions that took place in Switzerland before 1981. It investigates the history of these detentions including their links to other compulsory social measures and forced removals of children from their homes.

Federal Department of Defence,
Civil Protection and Sport

DDPS

The armed forces provide their members with good training and career prospects.

The head of the DDPS is Guy Parmelin. He has been a member of the Federal Council since 2016.

Protecting the country and its population

Against a backdrop of international tensions and their consequences, such as terrorism, war and refugee crises, the DDPS is there to protect the country, the people and critical infrastructure. It is worth remembering that Switzerland today is a stable and relatively safe country. Unfortunately, the world is not.

Developing the Armed Forces

The Swiss Armed Forces defend the country, support the civilian authorities and promote peace at an international level. In order to do that we need modern, dynamic armed forces capable of meeting current threats. The ongoing Armed Forces Development programme addresses these issues. Thanks to this programme and appropriate funding, the armed forces are able provide their citizens in uniform with modern training and proper equipment worthy of the commitment they give to defending our country.

Security cannot be taken for granted.

Protecting means preventing

The DDPS helps to safeguard Switzerland's security and liberty in a preventive capacity. To this end, the Federal Intelligence Service gathers relevant information about the situation abroad and takes appropriate measures to ensure internal security. Procurement budgets continually have to be adapted to the current threat level while maintaining the balance between security and liberty. The DDPS also takes a preventive approach to protecting the population. The Federal Office for Civil Protection identifies threats and dangers to the population, its environment and its cultural property and helps to protect them.

Promoting sport and its values

The Federal Office of Sport FOSPO promotes sport and physical activity for the whole population, especially children and young people. It also supports competitive sport and up-and-coming young athletes and helps with the organisation of international sporting events. In parallel with that, the federal government's action plan for the promotion of sport provides increased funding for the Youth + Sport programme and the renovation and construction of a number of sports facilities.

Federal Department of Defence, Civil Protection and Sport DDPS

Responsibility for Switzerland's security lies with the DDPS. The Swiss Armed Forces defend the country and its people, support the civilian authorities, and promote peace in international forums, while the Federal Office for Civil Protection helps to protect against disasters. The DDPS also provides the Armed Forces and third parties with systems, vehicles, materials and buildings, ensures the Confederation's civilian intelligence service, promotes sport and its values, and carries out modern topographical surveys.

Federal Intelligence Service FIS

Director: Markus Seiler
www.fis.admin.ch

The Federal Intelligence Service is responsible for prevention and situation assessment. It follows strategic developments, evaluates the threat situation and issues alerts in the event of impending crises or unusual developments with the aim of providing a situation analysis suitable for decision-makers at all levels. The FIS deals with the areas of terrorism, espionage, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and missile technology, and cyber attacks on critical infrastructure. The service is supervised by various bodies of the Administration and by Parliament.

Defence sector

Chief of the Armed Forces:
Lieutenant General Philippe Rebord
www.army.ch

The Defence sector is headed by the Chief of the Swiss Armed Forces, who holds the rank of lieutenant general. The Armed Forces Staff is responsible for its development, planning, resource allocation and management in the Armed Forces. The Armed Forces Joint Staff plans and ensures the required level of readiness of the forces and operations for a wide range of missions including security for the Annual Meeting of the World Economic Forum in Davos, peace promotion or disaster relief in the case of avalanches, flooding or forest fires in Switzerland or abroad. The commanders of the Land Forces and the Air Force bear overall responsibility for training the Land Forces and the Air Force and for preparing ground and air units for action. The militia officers and professional soldiers are trained at the Armed Forces College. The Logistics Organisation ensures the supply and return of weapons, equipment and food, maintenance and infrastructure, medical services and the transport troops. The Command Support Organisation provides all necessary electronic support services.

Federal Office for Defence Procurement armasuisse

Chief of Defence Procurement: Martin Sonderegger
www.armasuisse.ch

armasuisse is the DDPS competence centre for procurement, technology and real estate. It ensures that the Armed Forces and third parties are supplied with the systems, vehicles, equipment and buildings they require. It manages approximately 9,500 properties, sites and 24,000 hectares of land belonging to the DDPS. As armasuisse is responsible for weapons, equipment and real estate during their entire life cycle, it is also responsible for their liquidation at the end of their useful life.

Federal Office of Topography swisstopo

Director: Fridolin Wicki
www.swisstopo.ch

swisstopo is Switzerland's geoinformation centre. It is responsible for 'measuring' Switzerland and conducts surveys of the country and documents the landscape both above and below ground. Its products include maps, topographical and landscape models, aerial photos, orthoimages, geological data as well as online maps and applications for computers, tablets and smartphones, in particular the federal government's map viewer, map.geo.admin.ch. swisstopo coordinates geoinformation and geology activities at federal and cantonal level and runs the Institute for Military Geography. It is also the supervisory body for official cadastral surveying and the cadastre of public law restrictions on land ownership.

Federal Office for Civil Protection FOCP

Director: Benno Bühlmann
www.civilprotection.ch

In the event of disasters and emergencies, the Office ensures cooperation with the five partner organisations: the police, fire and health services, technical operations and civil defence. Responsibility for civil protection lies mainly with the cantons. The FOCP takes care of the general planning and coordination of protection in the areas of early warning and alert systems, training and protective infrastructure. The National Emergency Operations Centre and the Spiez Laboratory are also part of the Office.

In the event of incidents involving elevated levels of radioactivity, the National Emergency Operations Centre warns the general public and, if necessary, orders implementation of protection measures. The Spiez Laboratory is Switzerland's institute for nuclear, biological and chemical protection. Its services are increasingly in international demand.

Federal Office of Sport FOSPO

Director: Matthias Remund
www.baspo.ch

The Federal Office of Sport promotes sport and physical activity for all. It manages the Confederation's most important sport-promotion programme, Youth+Sport, and the Swiss Federal Institute of Sports Magglingen (Bern), a renowned education, training and research facility. The sports centres in Magglingen and Tenero (Ticino) provide state-of-the-art education and training facilities for clubs, schools and associations.

Federal Department of Finance

FDF

GOVERNMENT

Taxpayers ensure that the federal government, the cantons and the communes can finance our roads, schools, research – and much more.

The head of the FDF is Ueli Maurer. He has been a member of the Federal Council since 2009. He began as head of the DDPS before moving to the FDF in 2016.

Federal budget under pressure

The Federal Constitution states that the Confederation's spending may not outstrip revenue over the long term. This is known as the 'debt brake'. If a deficit seems nonetheless likely, austerity measures cannot be avoided. This has been the case several times since the debt brake was introduced in 2003. Longer term, our ageing society will place a greater burden on the federal budget, as state expenditure on pensions and invalidity benefit rises. The degree to which these demographic changes put additional pressure on federal finances depends to a large extent on economic growth.

Long-term strategies are required to ensure sound financial policy.

Financial markets policy and cross-border financial services

Switzerland's financial centre holds a key position in cross-border asset management, and access to foreign financial markets is a major success factor in this. Protecting and improving Switzerland's market access is one of the Federal Council's key objectives. Maintaining good relations and healthy international cooperation between finance ministries and national financial market supervisory bodies is a crucial factor in achieving this; obstacles and legal uncertainties can be identified early on and solutions found.

Border protection and security

As immigration levels rise and in the light of recent terrorist attacks, border protection and security have become a more prominent issue in the minds of politicians and the public. 700,000 persons, 350,000 vehicles and 20,000 lorries cross Switzerland's 1,900km-long border every day. It is not possible to control the entire border systematically. When and where controls take place depends on the current situation and risk analysis. Static and mobile controls, drones, helicopters and cameras are all used to ensure the quality of the controls.

Federal Department of Finance FDF

The FDF collects taxes and duties, and checks the movement of persons and goods at the border. It also provides services for the entire Federal Administration, ranging from IT to human resources and infrastructure support. The FDF fine-tunes its tax and fiscal policies to ensure the efficiency of the Confederation and Switzerland as a business location.

General Secretariat GS-FDF

Secretary General: Rahel von Kaenel
www.efd.admin.ch

The General Secretariat acts as the intermediary between the head of department and the federal offices, and between the cantons, journalists and communication officers. It plans and coordinates the department's items of business for Parliament and the Federal Council. It provides information to the public about all Federal Council and FDF business.

State Secretariat for International Financial Matters SIF

State Secretary: Jörg Gasser
www.sif.admin.ch

SIF represents Switzerland's interests in financial, monetary and tax matters in partner countries and in international bodies. It is committed to maintaining good framework conditions to ensure that Switzerland can be a secure, competitive and globally recognised financial centre and location for business. SIF is also responsible for implementing the Federal Council's financial market policy.

Federal Finance Administration FFA

Director: Serge Gaillard
www.efv.admin.ch

The FFA is the guardian of the public purse and ensures that the federal government can meet its payment obligations. It prepares the federal government's budget, finance plan and financial statements. The debt brake, a critical look at the departments' financial conduct and consideration of the economic situation are the bedrock for a sound fiscal policy.

Federal Office of Personnel FOPER

Director: Barbara Schaerer
www.epa.admin.ch

As an employer, the federal government is facing stiff competition from other companies. FOPER is responsible for the federal government's personnel and pension policy. FOPER ensures that the Federal Administration remains a competitive employer.

Federal Tax Administration FTA

Director: Adrian Hug
www.estv.admin.ch

The FTA raises a major part of the Confederation's receipts and so ensures that the Confederation can perform its public duties. It therefore collects VAT, direct federal tax, withholding tax, stamp duty and military service exemption tax. The FTA also provides international administrative assistance in tax matters.

Federal Customs Administration FCA

Director: Christian Bock
www.customs.admin.ch

The FCA makes sure the cross-border movement of goods and persons is as smooth as possible. Civil customs officers are responsible for overseeing the movement of goods. The Border Guard is the uniformed and armed section of the FCA. It handles security, customs and migration tasks. The FCA also collects VAT, mineral oil tax and tobacco duty.

Federal Office of Information Technology, Systems and Telecommunications FOITT

Director: Giovanni Conti
www.bit.admin.ch

As the federal competence centre for IT, the FOITT provides support for business processes in the Federal Administration and ensures the proper functioning of telecommunications between all federal offices in Switzerland and abroad. The FOITT plays a key role in providing an electronic link between the Confederation and the public.

Federal Office for Buildings and Logistics FOBL

Director: Pierre Broye
www.bbl.admin.ch

The FOBL builds, maintains and manages the federal government's civilian properties, which include the Federal Palace, administrative buildings and the Swiss embassies around the world. As the central procurement office, it buys IT resources, office equipment and publications for the entire Federal Administration.

Federal IT Steering Unit FITSU

Delegate: Peter Fischer
www.fitsu.admin.ch

The FITSU is responsible for implementing the information and communication technologies strategy in the Federal Administration. It also works with the Confederation, cantons and communes to coordinate the implementation of the e-Government Strategy Switzerland and manages the Reporting and Analysis Centre for Information Assurance (MELANI).

Swiss Alcohol Board SAB

Interim head: Stefan Schmidt
www.eav.admin.ch

The SAB's task is to implement legislation relating to alcohol. It regulates the spirits market by means of taxes and restrictions on trading and advertising. Following a partial revision of the Alcohol Act, in 2018 the SAB is to be transferred to the Federal Customs Administration.

Swiss Financial Market Supervisory Authority FINMA

Director: Mark Branson
www.finma.ch

FINMA provides the effective, competent and independent oversight which is necessary for the supervision of the financial sector. It is committed to protecting creditors, investors and insured persons, and monitors the financial markets' ability to function. FINMA supervises banks, insurance companies, stock exchanges and funds requiring authorisation.

Swiss Federal Audit Office SFAO

Director: Michel Huissoud
www.efk.admin.ch

The SFAO is the Confederation's supreme audit institution. It is an independent institution and audits the financial conduct of the Federal Administration, the courts and the numerous semi-state organisations. It inspects the Confederation's state financial statements annually. It aims to ensure that tax revenue is used economically and effectively.

Federal Pension Fund PUBLICA

Director: Dieter Stohler
www.publica.ch

As a non-profit collective occupational pension fund, PUBLICA manages assets totalling around CHF 37 billion. With 63,000 insured persons and 43,000 pension recipients, PUBLICA is one of the largest pension funds in Switzerland.

Federal Department of Economic Affairs,
Education and Research

EAER

GOVERNMENT

This trainee carpenter learns the skills of the trade on the job, and the theory at vocational school. The dual-track system of vocational education and training guarantees practical qualifications.

The head of the EAER is Johann N. Schneider-Ammann. He has been a member of the Federal Council since 2010.

Ensuring economic prosperity

The EAER is committed to creating economic policy conditions that allow all people to share the benefits of economic prosperity. The digital age involves risks, but also offers major opportunities, and it is becoming a driving force for innovation. Today, the economy, social partners, science and research need to work together with the support of the public to develop a policy that will enable Switzerland to reap the full benefits of digitalisation.

Training the skilled workers of tomorrow.

Encouraging skilled workers

Switzerland has experienced a shortage of skilled labour for several years. Digitalisation will continue to bring changes to the labour market and increase the demand for well-trained workers in the Swiss economy. In order to keep pace with this development, since 2011 moves have been made to increase the skills available on the labour market by introducing measures to encourage people to do further training, retrain or obtain higher qualifications.

The measures aim to exploit the skills potential in Switzerland to a greater extent, and to maintain and promote the flexibility of the Swiss labour market.

Investing in training

By providing good training, we are investing in the skilled workers of tomorrow. We prepare our young people for the challenges of a rapidly changing globalised and digitalised world, and offer them the best possible career options. Not only does the Confederation provide the necessary financial resources, it also ensures the education system is sufficiently flexible so that no matter the qualification gained, new pathways are always open.

Opening markets

Switzerland is an export-oriented country. Our main trading partner is the EU. Securing bilateral agreements is therefore of utmost importance. If our economy is to grow further, we must find new markets in addition to the already well-developed network of free trade agreements. For this purpose, negotiations are currently underway with several countries.

Federal Department of Economic Affairs, Education and Research EAER

The EAER shapes the conditions for ensuring job creation, growth and prosperity in Switzerland. The department is also responsible for policy on education and research. With this remit alone almost everyone living in Switzerland is directly affected by the work of the EAER, but other important aspects of everyday life play an important role too, such as agriculture and the food we eat, housing and the roof over our heads, and provision with essential supplies in the event of a crisis.

General Secretariat GS-EAER

Secretary General: Stefan Brupbacher
www.wbf.admin.ch

The General Secretariat is the staff and coordination office of the head of department. It manages the department's needs in terms of human and financial resources, prepares parliamentary and Federal Council business and is responsible for keeping the general public informed about the EAER's activities. The Federal Consumer Affairs Bureau FCAB and the Central Office for Civilian Service ZIVI report to the General Secretariat for administrative matters. Among other things the FCAB is responsible for granting financial assistance to consumer organisations, ensuring the declaration of origin of wood and wood products, and together with SECO runs a product safety information and reporting office. For the last 20 years, ZIVI has been preparing Swiss men who for reasons of conscience choose not to perform military service for community-based service and arranges their placements. Around 1.5 million civilian service days are performed each year.

State Secretariat for Economic Affairs SECO

State Secretary: Marie-Gabrielle Ineichen-Fleisch
www.seco.admin.ch

SECO deals with the key issues concerning economic policy. It aims to promote sustainable economic growth, high employment and fair working conditions. To achieve this it creates the necessary regulatory, economic and foreign economic policy conditions. The range of issues that SECO deals with includes labour market policy, employee protection, the dismantling of trade barriers, access to foreign markets, and economic development and cooperation.

State Secretariat for Education, Research and Innovation SERI

State Secretary: Mauro Dell'Ambrogio
www.seri.admin.ch

Education, research and innovation (ERI) are of fundamental importance for Switzerland, whose success depends on the generation, dissemination and exploitation of expertise and knowledge. SERI is mandated to strengthen and further develop the quality of the ERI system in collaboration with the cantons, business, higher education institutions and bodies active in promoting research and innovation.

Federal Office for Agriculture FOAG

Director: Bernard Lehmann
www.foag.admin.ch

Switzerland is shaped to a large extent by its agriculture. To ensure that this remains so, the FOAG seeks to ensure a thriving agricultural and food sector capable of achieving market success through its high-quality products, sustainable production methods and the measures it implements to preserve resources. The FOAG is committed to establishing conditions conducive to promoting entrepreneurial capacity in agriculture. The research institute, Agroscope, provides the scientific basis to achieve this.

Federal Office for National Economic Supply FONES

Delegate: Werner Meier
www.fones.admin.ch

In its capacity as a centre of expertise in matters regarding security of supply, the FONES, in close cooperation with the private sector, partner authorities and the cantons, ensures that serious short-term supply shortages of important goods and services do not result in significant disruption for the Swiss population and economy.

Federal Office for Housing FOH

Director: Ernst Hauri
www.bwo.admin.ch

Housing is a basic need and an important economic asset. The FOH promotes a housing market that is attractive for investors and supplies enough residential space in all price categories. The FOH provides targeted financial support for the construction of non-profit residential buildings. It seeks to reconcile the interests of landlords and tenants in tenancy legislation.

Office of the Price Supervisor

Price Supervisor: Stefan Meierhans
www.preisueberwacher.admin.ch

The price supervisor intervenes in situations where prices increase excessively owing to a lack of free market competition. The price supervisor is primarily active in the health and infrastructure sectors.

Competition Commission COMCO

Director: Rafael Corazza
www.weko.admin.ch

COMCO's task is to ensure open markets. It intervenes in cases of cartel formation, abuse of market power, mergers that threaten open markets, and state obstacles to competition. In its capacity as 'advocate of competition' it provides information and advice to companies and government authorities.

Federal Institutes of Technology Group ETH Domain

President of the ETH Board: Fritz Schiesser
www.ethrat.ch

The ETH Domain consists of the two federal institutes of technology, ETH Zurich and EPF Lausanne, and the four research institutes, the Paul Scherrer Institute (PSI), the Swiss Federal Institute for Forest, Snow and Landscape Research (WSL), the Swiss Federal Laboratory for Materials Testing and Research (Empa) and the Swiss Federal Institute of Aquatic Science and Technology (Eawag). The ETH Board is the strategic management and supervisory body of the ETH Domain. It supervises development plans, carries out control activities and ensures good coordination among its partners.

Swiss Federal Institute for Vocational Education and Training SFIVET

Director: Cornelia Oertle
www.sfivet-switzerland.ch

SFIVET, which has offices in Lausanne, Lugano, Zollikofen und Zurich, is the federal centre of expertise for initial and continuing education training of VET trainers and for development and research in this field.

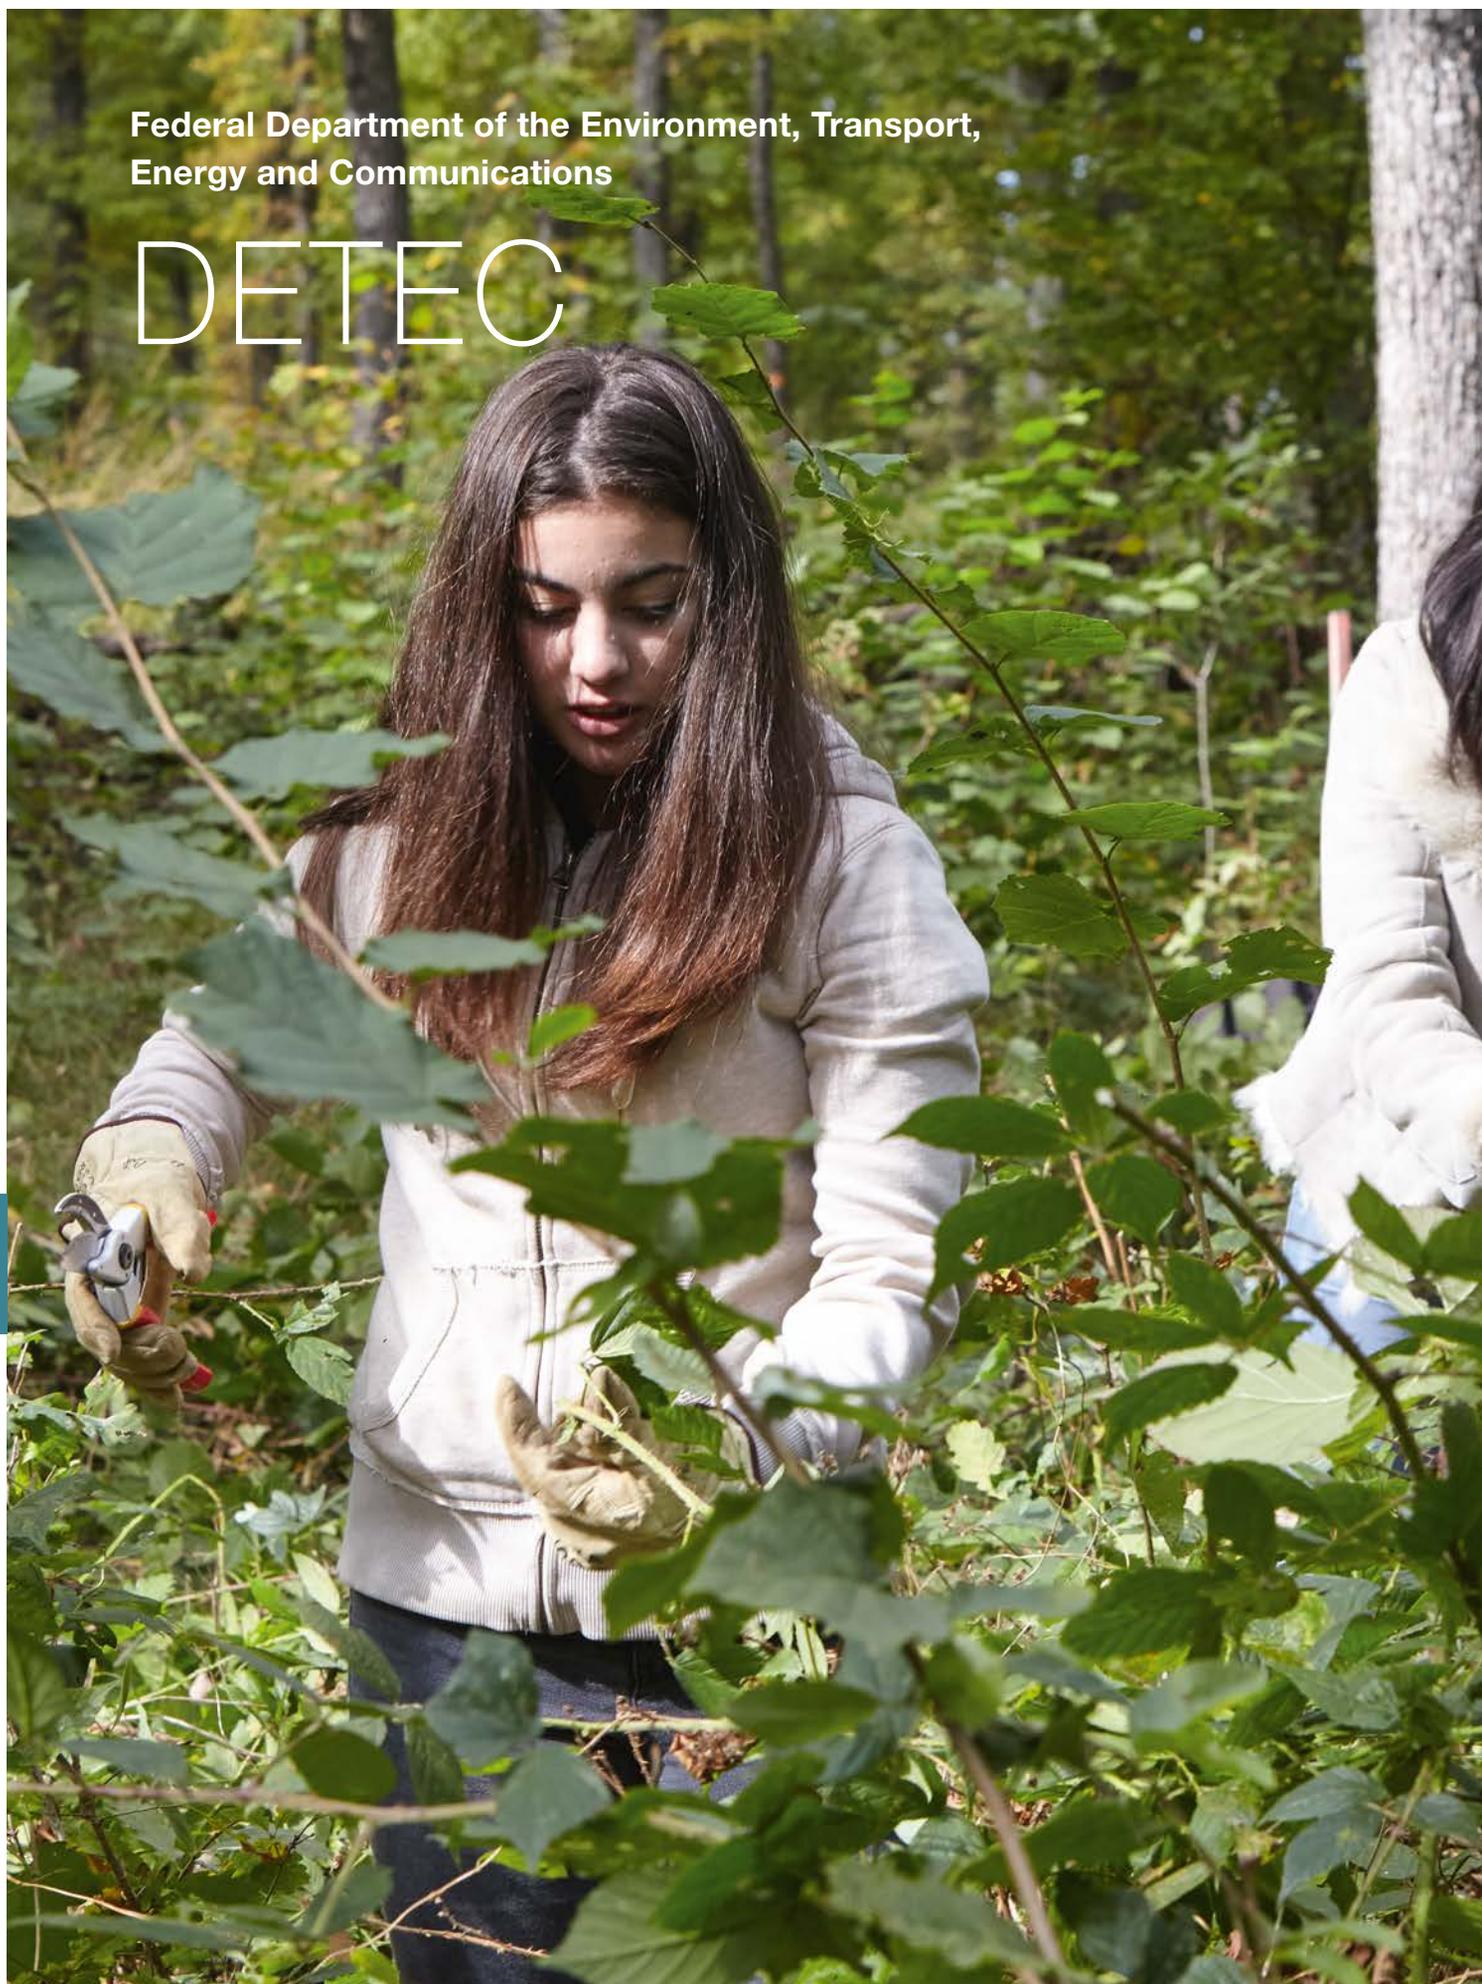

Commission for Technology and Innovation CTI

Director: Annalise Eggimann

DETEC

Close-up view: school children experiencing how a wood develops sustainably as part of a DETEC forestry project.

The head of DETEC is Doris Leuthard. She has been a member of the Federal Council since 2006. She began as head of the FDEA (now EAER) before moving to DETEC in 2010. She is the President of the Swiss Confederation in 2017.

DETEC's work involves promoting the sustainable use of our natural resources – via appropriate legislation and education, awareness campaigns and consultancy. We do this in the conviction that well-informed citizens and businesses will take care of the environment.

Early awareness

Someone who is aware that the supply of natural resources is limited is unlikely to throw away plastic bottles, mobile phones or batteries: they will take them to be recycled. And someone who knows that using hydro, solar or wind power is better for the environment than burning oil and gas will carefully plan how they build their house or which new car or electrical appliance they buy. Awareness-raising campaigns to influence people's behaviour need to begin early on. That's why EnergieSchweiz – the Confederation's platform for energy efficiency and renewable energies – provides teachers with materials on the topic of energy that are suitable for use in the classroom.

Knowledge is key to protecting the environment.

Responsibility is key

A key focus of DETEC's education programme is to encourage people to be more responsible for their own actions. Children and young adults should be equipped to look ahead and consider the impact of their behaviour. In the ‘Försterwelt’ – ‘Forester’s World’ – project, for example, primary school children manage an area of woodland for three years under the supervision of a forester, learning what sustainable forest management involves. In a further project, DETEC and the accident prevention agency bfu explain road safety to children starting school.

Improved resource efficiency

The private sector is also encouraged to act responsibly, for example by improving resource efficiency. The federally funded network reffnet.ch advises businesses on how to do this and so considerably reduce operating costs. This is a win-win situation for the environment and the Swiss economy.

Federal Department of the Environment, Transport, Energy and Communications DETEC

DETEC is Switzerland’s ‘ministry of infrastructure’. Roads, railways, power lines: all the things that hold our country together fall within DETEC’s remit. The department is also responsible for Switzerland’s soil, water, air, flora, fauna and the countryside. These natural resources are the bases of life, but are under pressure due to human activity. Maintaining these resources is one of DETEC’s principal responsibilities.

General Secretariat GS-DETEC

Secretary General: Toni Eder
www.uvek.admin.ch

The overlapping nature of many items of business requires extensive coordination with DETEC’s specialised offices and other departments. The General Secretariat takes on this task. It prepares items of business for the Federal Council, supports political planning, acts as an intermediary between DETEC and Parliament and is responsible for the department’s external communication. In addition, it also acts as owner of Swiss Post, SBB, Swisscom and Skyguide and supervises the implementation of the strategic aims set out by the Federal Council.

Federal Office of Transport FOT

Director: Peter Füglistaler
www.fot.admin.ch

The Federal Office of Transport FOT manages the progressive expansion and financing of rail infrastructure. It carries out the tasks set by the Federal Council and Parliament, monitors compliance in terms of cost and deadlines, and is also responsible for safety supervision in public transport.

Federal Office of Civil Aviation FOCA

Director: Christian Hegner
www.foca.admin.ch

The FOCA ensures the high safety standards in Swiss civil aviation, which are primarily based on internationally agreed standards. In addition to its supervisory activity, it is responsible for the preparation and implementation of decision-making on civil aviation policy. The office is actively involved in international aviation organisations to ensure that Switzerland’s interests are taken into account.

Swiss Federal Office of Energy SFOE

Director: Benoît Revaz
www.sfoe.admin.ch

The Federal Council’s energy policy is oriented towards improving energy efficiency, promoting renewable energy sources, particularly hydropower, developing the electricity grid, and increasing energy research and international cooperation. It puts these energy policy principles into practice and draws up, for example, regulations on the energy consumption of household appliances, consumer electronics, light bulbs and electric motors. The aim is to ensure that Switzerland will still have sufficient, safe, affordable and environmentally friendly energy supplies in the future.

Federal Roads Office FEDRO

Director: Jürg Röthlisberger
www.astra.admin.ch

FEDRO is mandated by the Federal Council and Parliament to take responsibility for extending and maintaining the national roads network. In addition, it is also responsible for the implementation of the 'Via sicura' road safety programme, the aim of which is to further reduce the number of people killed or injured in road accidents. Only well-trained drivers with safe vehicles should be driving on safe roads.

Federal Office of Communications BAKOM

Director: Philipp Metzger
www.bakom.admin.ch

Making calls, sending emails or text messages, surfing on the internet – all this requires a powerful communications infrastructure. OFCOM helps to ensure that this is the case throughout Switzerland. It distributes the revenues from television and radio licence fees to the regional broadcasters and to the Swiss Broadcasting Corporation, and ensures that print media benefit from reduced postage rates. It also oversees the provision of payment services by Swiss Post.

Federal Office for the Environment FOEN

Director: Marc Chardonens
www.foen.admin.ch

Natural resources such as water, soil and air are under pressure because they are frequently being over-exploited. Switzerland's environmental policy aims to ensure that the country's natural resources remain intact for future generations. One of the FOEN's key tasks is to conserve ecosystems with their flora and fauna as the basis of life. The FOEN also concerns itself with the causes of climate change and its consequences. It supports cantons and communes to prepare for flooding, rockslides and avalanches by keeping protective forests intact or by renaturalising rivers to protect roads and residential areas.

Federal Office for Spatial Development ARE

Director: Maria Lezzi
www.aren.admin.ch

Coping with a growing population, increasing mobility and greater demand for living space – as well as protecting the countryside: these are the parameters within which ARE operates. To protect land that is becoming ever more scarce, it promotes and oversees legislation on residential development. ARE contributes to improving coordination between transport infrastructure and urban development. The spatial concept drawn up jointly by the Confederation, the cantons, cities and communes under ARE's lead sets out the guidelines for future spatial development.

Swiss Federal Nuclear Safety Inspectorate ENSI

Director: Hans Wanner
www.ensi.ch

The Swiss Federal Nuclear Safety Inspectorate ENSI is responsible for ensuring the safe operation of nuclear installations in Switzerland. ENSI therefore supervises Switzerland's five nuclear power stations, the interim storage sites for radioactive waste and the nuclear research units at the Paul Scherrer Institute, Federal Institute of Technology in Lausanne and the University of Basel.

Federal Chancellery

FCh

The Federal Chancellor and the two vice chancellors are always present at Federal Council meetings.

The Federal Chancellery is headed by Walter Thurnherr. He has been the Federal Chancellor since 2016.

Staff office of the Federal Council

The Federal Chancellery was established in 1803 and as such is the oldest federal institution. It serves as a hub between the federal government, the Administration, Parliament and the People.

The Federal Chancellor is elected by Parliament for four years in the same way as the members of the Federal Council. As the Federal Council's chief of staff, he ensures the proper functioning of the government. Together with the two vice chancellors, he attends the meetings of the Federal Council. The Federal Chancellor can submit proposals on all Federal Council business, but has no voting rights.

Federal Chancellery FCh

The Federal Chancellery is the staff office of the Federal Council. It prepares the meetings of the Federal Council and informs Parliament and the public of the decisions taken. It verifies the legality of initiatives and referendums and makes sure that national elections and votes are conducted properly. It publishes official texts in several languages.

Expenses 2015

Planning for the Federal Council

The policy of the Federal Council is incorporated into a planning process. The Federal Chancellery prepares the planning instruments in close cooperation with the departments to produce a four-year legislature plan, which serves as a basis for the annual objectives. In its annual report, the Federal Council reports on whether it has achieved those objectives.

Preparing Federal Council meetings

The Federal Council generally meets once a week. The Federal Chancellery manages the agenda. Before the Federal Council considers the items of business, the departments and federal offices can submit their views and make proposals. The Federal Chancellery coordinates this joint reporting procedure and reviews the items of business from a formal and legal point of view.

Communicating Federal Council decisions

After every Federal Council meeting, the Federal Council Spokesperson, Vice Chancellor André Simonazzi, goes before the press to announce the Federal Council's decisions. He is often accompanied by one or more members of the Federal Council and experts from the Federal Administration, who are available to answer questions from journalists.

www.admin.ch/tv (media conferences)

www.admin.ch/en-news (press releases)

Following the meetings of the Federal Council, the Federal Chancellery also informs all seven departments about the decisions taken. Responsibility for that task falls to Vice Chancellor Jörg De Bernardi. The Federal Chancellery publishes the Federal Council decisions and reports in the Federal Gazette in the three official languages. It publishes new or amended acts and ordinances in the Official Compilation of Federal Legislation.

www.admin.ch/federalallw

Publishing information through a range of channels

Before a popular vote is held, the country's nearly five million eligible voters receive a pamphlet about the proposals submitted to a popular vote. The Federal Chancellery works with the departments to prepare the pamphlet. Before the federal elections, the Federal Chancellery distributes a guide on how to go about voting. The Federal Chancellery provides information about the activities and characteristics of the federal government and the federal authorities in publications such as 'The Swiss Confederation, a brief guide' and on two websites.

Translating into several languages

The official languages of Switzerland are German, French and Italian. The texts of acts, ordinances and treaties, as well as voting and election material must be made available in at least these three languages, a task for which the Federal Chancellery Language Services are responsible. They also provide translations in Romansh and English when required.

Overseeing democratic rights

Swiss citizens are called on to vote three to four times a year in national referendums and popular initiatives, and every four years to elect a new parliament. The Federal Chancellery ensures that the electoral process runs smoothly. It provides the necessary information on the proper procedures to anyone interested in launching a popular initiative or a referendum. It also checks to make sure that requests for popular initiatives and referendums meet the formal requirements.

Managing the 'Vote électronique' project

Currently, the majority of the Swiss electorate vote by post. Some cantons also offer the possibility of voting electronically. This voting method, known as 'Vote électronique', is especially convenient for the Swiss living abroad. The Federal Chancellery is developing the 'Vote électronique' project in conjunction with the cantons.

Supporting the President of the Swiss Confederation

During their year as Swiss president, federal councillors have additional tasks. The Presidential Services Unit of the Federal Chancellery assists with communications and diplomatic affairs.

Managing the Federal Council's residences

The Federal Council has two residences in which it receives its guests from Switzerland and abroad, the von Wattenwyl House and the Landsitz Lohn. In the von Wattenwyl House it also regularly holds discussions with the political parties in government; these are known as the 'von Wattenwyl talks'.

Providing a platform for politics in the Käfigturm

The Federal Chancellery and Parliamentary Services jointly run the Political Forum of the Confederation. Exhibitions, lectures, panel discussions and films addressing political issues provide interested citizens with an opportunity for discussion.

Legal theory in practice: law students at the University of Fribourg visit a public hearing of the Federal Supreme Court in Lausanne.

The third state power

THE JUDICIARY

Interview with Ulrich Meyer, President of the Federal Supreme Court

Mr Meyer, how does one become a Federal Supreme Court judge?

There is no standard way. You can lay the professional groundwork by gaining a reputation as a highly competent lawyer, whether as a cantonal judge, a practising attorney or a legal academic. But whether you are actually appointed as a Federal Supreme Court judge depends on a lot of other factors: political affiliation, gender, canton of origin, language and other criteria are all taken into account when the Judiciary Committee selects the candidates that it will propose to the United Federal Assembly. The work of Federal Supreme Court judges is not political, but their appointments are – very much so. This is typical of the Swiss concept of the state, which requires all three branches of state to have democratic legitimacy – and that includes the Federal Supreme Court, as the highest court in the land.

Are all Supreme Court judgments equally important?

For those concerned, all judgments are equally important; all litigants have an equal right to a fair decision that conforms to the law. However, no more than 10 % of the 8,000 or so judgments that we hand down each year relate to fundamental matters of law. One example of a famous landmark decision is the Supreme Court judgment on whiplash injuries (BGE 136 V 279), which was widely discussed in public – and which even led to me appearing in a newspaper cartoon.

What sort of relationship does the Federal Supreme Court have with Parliament?

The Federal Supreme Court is the third power in the federal state. Parliament makes laws, and the Federal Supreme Court applies them. In doing so, the Federal Supreme Court normally has a certain degree of latitude in how it interprets the law, which occasionally leads to it being accused of making politically motivated decisions. The best response to this came from Federal Supreme Court judge Jean Fonnjallaz, the former President of the First Public Law Division, who said, “The Federal Supreme Court does not make political decisions, but its decisions can have a political effect.”

“The Federal Supreme Court does not make political decisions, but its decisions can have a political effect.”

What kind of public presence does the Federal Supreme Court have?

The Federal Supreme Court’s main task is to decide cases. Its judgments are published on the Federal Supreme Court’s website (www.bger.ch) and public debate about these decisions, even if it is critical, leads them to being more readily accepted. It is very important in controversial ground-breaking cases that the hearings are held in public; these hearings are announced on the court’s website and anyone who is interested can come to the court to watch. Professional media relations work is essential in maintaining the Federal Supreme Court’s good reputation.

STANDARD PROCEDURES IN THE SWISS LEGAL SYSTEM

* In the cantons of Zurich, Bern, St. Gallen and Aargau there is also a commercial court, which is the only cantonal court dealing with commercial disputes.

 The Appeals Chamber of the Federal Criminal Court also deals with cases relating to orders issued by the federal prosecution authorities, administrative law cases, cases on mutual assistance in criminal matters and on conflicts of jurisdiction.

 Depending on the canton/subject matter, the cantonal administrative court may have direct jurisdiction.

The courts at federal level

THE FEDERAL SUPREME COURT AND THE FEDERAL COURTS OF FIRST INSTANCE

The Federal Supreme Court

President:
Ulrich Meyer

Vice-President:
Martha Niquille

The Federal Supreme Court is the highest judicial authority in Switzerland. It rules in the final instance on all appeals against decisions of the highest cantonal courts, the Federal Criminal Court, the Federal Administrative Court and the Federal Patent Court. The court ensures that Swiss federal law is correctly applied in individual cases and that the rights of citizens enshrined in the constitution are protected.

As the court of final instance, the Federal Supreme Court rules on cases from almost all areas of law. When an appeal is filed, it examines whether the law was correctly applied in the contested decision and thus ensures the uniform application of federal law throughout the country. Its decisions contribute to the development of the law and to its adaptation to new circumstances. The other courts and the administrative authorities use the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court as a reference and adopt their principles. Procedures before the Federal Supreme Court take place in writing. There are no court hearings with plaintiffs and defendants giving testimony and lawyers pleading their cases. The Federal Supreme Court bases its decisions on facts as they are established by the lower instances and described in the records of the previous proceedings. If the Federal Supreme Court concludes that a lower court has decided incorrectly, it overturns the contested decision and if necessary sends it back to the previous instance for a new decision. In addition to its work as the highest judicial authority, the Federal Supreme Court exercises administrative supervision over the Federal Criminal Court, the Federal Administrative Court and the Federal Patent Court.

The Federal Supreme Court is based in Lausanne and is divided into seven divisions, each with responsibility for decisions in their specific area of law: two public law divisions, two civil law divisions, one criminal law division and two social law divisions. The latter two are based in Lucerne. The General Secretariat is responsible for the court's administrative duties.

The 38 Federal Supreme Court judges are elected by the United Federal Assembly (National Council and Council of States) on the recommendation of the parliamentary Judiciary Committee. The recommendations are based on considerations of professional experience, language, region and political party affiliation. Federal Supreme Court judges are elected for a six-year term of office with no restriction on how many times they may be re-elected. There is, however, an upper age limit of 68. The United Federal Assembly appoints one of the serving judges as president and one as vice-president of the Federal Supreme Court. In addition, there are 19 deputy Federal Supreme Court judges and a further 280 positions for court clerks and other court employees.

The Federal Criminal Court

President:
Daniel Kipfer Fasciati

The Federal Criminal Court hears criminal cases which, due to their subject matter or importance, are subject to federal jurisdiction. In addition, the Court rules on appeals against decisions made by federal prosecution authorities, in mutual assistance cases and in disputes over jurisdiction.

Most criminal cases are decided in the first instance by cantonal courts. By law, only certain categories of offences fall under federal jurisdiction and are decided by the Federal Criminal Court. These include offences against federal interests, explosives offences, international cases of white-collar crime, cases relating to organised crime, corruption and money laundering, and offences related to civil aviation or war material. In response to appeals, the Federal Criminal Court also reviews orders made by federal prosecution authorities, and decisions made under administrative criminal law and in cases of mutual assistance in criminal matters. In addition, it rules on conflicts of jurisdiction involving prosecution authorities. Most decisions taken by the Federal Criminal Courts can be appealed to the Federal Supreme Court.

Due to the tasks that it has, the court comprises a criminal chamber and an appeals chamber. The current 18 judges of the Federal Criminal Court are appointed by the Federal Assembly for a term of office of six years.

The Federal Criminal Court has been in existence since 2004 and is based in Bellinzona. In 2013, its 65 members of staff moved into a new purpose-built court building.

The Federal Administrative Court

President:
Jean-Luc Baechler

The Federal Administrative Court handles complaints against decisions made by authorities of the Federal Administration. Each year, Switzerland's largest federal court rules in around 7,500 cases relating to a very broad range of areas.

The Federal Administrative Court handles a very broad range of areas including the environment, transport, energy, taxation, education, economics, competition, social insurance, health, naturalisation as well as legislation on foreign nationals and asylum seekers. Some of the issues may be controversial from both a social and political standpoint. Examples include decisions of principle in asylum-related cases or in major transport and infrastructure projects. In certain areas, the Federal Administrative Court may also examine complaints against decisions made by cantonal authorities. Generally speaking, the judgments of the Federal Administrative Court may be appealed to the Federal Supreme Court. In certain areas (e.g. asylum), the Federal Administrative Court is the court of last instance.

The Federal Administrative Court is composed of six divisions, each responsible for a specific area of legislation. The judges of the Federal Administrative Court are elected by the United Federal Assembly for a six-year term.

Created back in 2007, the Federal Administrative Court has been based in St. Gallen since 2012. Each year, the court rules in around 7,500 cases. With around 72 judges and 320 court staff, the Federal Administrative Court is Switzerland's largest federal court.

The Federal Patent Court

President:
Dieter Brändle

The Federal Patent Court handles patent disputes, mainly patent infringement cases and nullity actions. The involvement of judges with technical expertise enables cases to be processed swiftly and cost-effectively.

Technical inventions, which often come at considerable expense, are afforded valuable legal protection in the form of patents. In a dispute, the Federal Patent Court decides whether a patent for a technical innovation is legally valid and whether granted patent rights are infringed by a product or process. The Federal Patent Court may also handle other patent-related claims, such as cases where there is dispute over who holds a given patent, or how a patent may be used within the framework of a licence. Decisions of the Federal Patent Court may be appealed to the Federal Supreme Court.

The judges of the Federal Patent Court are elected by the Federal Assembly for a six-year term. The involvement of judges with technical expertise enables cases submitted to the Federal Patent Court to be processed swiftly and cost-effectively since there is no need for external technical expert opinions, which tend to be costly and time-consuming. A high percentage of cases are settled by compromise between the parties to the dispute.

Created in January 2012, the Federal Patent Court is based in St. Gallen. A particular feature of the Federal Patent Court is that English may be used for submissions and at hearings instead of a national language of Switzerland (German, French, Italian or Romansh) if both parties in the dispute give their consent.
